Clarence B. Edwards, Democratic Candidate for District Attorney, September Primaries

I respectfully solicit the support of the voters of Wood county for the nomination, on the Democratic ticket, to the office of District Attorney, and trust that each voter will consider this as much a personal request for his vote as if I had personally seen him and ask him to vote for me.

I have always been a Democrat, and in every campaign have done what I could for the Democratic party and its candidates. I have never held county office. I am a graduate of the Academic and Law departments of the University of Wisconsin, and have practiced law in the city of Marshfield for the past twelve years. I speak the German language well enough for all practical needs.

In the hope and belief that the vast majority of the the voters feel that those who have faithfully stood by the party in its hours of adversity are entitled to recognition now that its success seems assured, I respectfully submit my candidacy to the Democracy of Wood county. Yours for a Democratic victory,

CLARENCE B. EDWARDS, Marshfield, Wis.

"The Divorce Question."

—In the midst of all the theatrical frivolity comes a play now and then with a moral, a play with and for a purpose and written with the intention of enlightening a class on a subject that hitherto had received but little thought despite surrounding conditions.

"The Divorce Question" by William Anthony McGuire a powerfully written play taking the stand of the Catholic Church's opposition to divorce, and proving conclusively that divorce does not obtain the conditions sought for and particularly is emphasized the parents duty to the children. This strikingly original play will be seen at Daly's Theatre on Friday, Sept. 6 under the direction of Rowland and Clifford.

Uniform Express Way-Bills.

After Sept. 1 all express companies will use a uniform way bill with one color for charges paid shipments and another for charges collect shipments.

All shipments on which the charges have been paid by the shipper will be billed with a goldenrod yellow way-bill and will bear a goldenrod label and also a copy of the waybill, pasted to the package and goldenrod in color. Shipments on which the charges are to be collected when delivered will have white way bills and white labels. Under this uniform system a glance will show the person receiving the packages whether it is prepaid or not and there will be no excuse for paying drivers on prepaid shipments.

Church Notice.

On Tuesday evening of this week beginning at 7:30 there was held a meeting in the Sunday School Assembly room of the Congregational church to plan for the state convention and to appoint such committees as may be necessary to arrange for the reception and entertainment of delegates The convention will begin on Friday evening, Sept. 13th and close Monday evening, Sept. 16th. About 250 clergymen and lay delegates are expected.

Next Sunday there will be services morning and evening in the Congregational church. The pastor will preach at both services.

Damaged by Lightning.

The dwelling house of Horace Barrett was struck by lightning last night and damaged to some extent.

The house of W. A. Drumb was also struck during the electric storm and damaged somewhat and set on fire, but the flames were extinguished with little damage.

One of the chimneys on F. J. Wood's residence was demolished by the lightning and other damage done.

Lightning struck L. M. Nash's big barn near Junction City and knocked the cupals off but did not burn the barn. The building had some 200 tons of hay in it at the time and it was lucky to escape being destroyed by fire.

Modern Woodmen Attention.

All members of the Modern Woodmen lodge are requested to be at the regular meeting on Thursday evening as arrangements are to be made for attending the funeral of Neighbor William Krause. H. J. Giese, Clerk.

TENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The Catholic Societies of this city are making preparations for the Tenth Annual Convention of the Wisconsin Federation of Catholic Societies, which is to meet here next Sunday and Monday, Sept. 1st and 2nd. The Most Rev. S. O. Messmer D. D. archbishop of Milwaukee, Rt. Rev. Jas. Schwebach D. D. bishop of La-Crosse, Rt. Rev. J. Fox D. D. bishop of Green Bay and a large number of priests and delegates representing Catholics ocieties of various parts of the state will be in attendance.

It is not a political organization and does not control the political affiliations of its members; it asks no favors or privileges, but openly proclaims what is fair and just. It aims at the creation of sound public opinion on all important topics of the day; it stands for christian life of the nation itself; for the proper observance of Sunday, christian education of youth, sanctity and perpetuity of christian marriage, and the safeguarding of the christian home.

It asserts the necessity of christian principles in social and public life, in the state, in business and in all financial and industrial relations. It combats all errors which are in opposition to christianity and threaten to undermine the very foundation of human society.

It is to cooperate with all loyal citizens and with all civic and social energies which work for truth and virtue. It exposes falsehoods and injustice whether in misrepresentation of history, doctrine, or moral principles. The aims of the Federation, therefore, are religious and patriotic. They are the interest of all American citizens, especially of those who believe in a Divine Lawgiver and in the revelation of a Divine Religion through Christ the Savior.

Gave a Good Concert.

The audience that assembled at Daly's Theatre on Friday evening to listen to the concert given by Misses Knoller, Wedge and Hein was not as large as it should have been considering the merit of the different numbers, but it is safe to say that every number was thorely appreciated by those in attendance.

Miss Hattie B. Hein is from Stevens Point and is a pianist of more than ordinary ability, and rendered several solos during the evening in a masterly manner. She is also a violinist and handled this most difficult of all instruments in a manner that was most pleasing to the audience.

Miss Mabel Manning Wedge was the vocalist of the evening and she has a most charming voice and had to respond to several encores before the audience was satisfied.

Miss Knoller rendered a piano solo, with accompaniement on another piano and her work was such as would please anybody who is a lover of music. Taken altogther, it was a first class concert, and the only thing to regret was that there were not more music lovers of the city present to hear it.

Reconstruction at Black River Falls.

Black River Falls Banner:—It almost makes one dizzy to get up where he can see and witness the rush and hurry that is constantly going on in the reconstruction of our city. Loads of stone, sand, dirt, lumber, brick, cement blocks and all the material used in the preparing and for the construction of the new buildings are moving in every direction. Workingmen of all kinds are busy as bees and a birdseye view would represent the work of an ant hill on one of their busy days.

It took but a few hours to complete the destruction of our city last fall, but it is taking months—indeed it may take years—to get back anywhere near a semblance of what it was on the morning of the 6th of last October. But we are on the highway to restoration and the people are all showing good pluck and are sure to succeed.

Dancing Party at the Pavilion.

A dancing party is announced for Thursday evening of this week at the Pavilion for the benefit of the Federation.

It is expected that a large number will attend for thus far this summer the weather has not been propitious and few parties have been held.

The price of admission will be fifty cents for each person and this will include refreshments, which will be served.

The Saecker Orchestra has been secured for the occasion. Dancing will begin at eight thirty and continue until one o'clock when the last cars will leave.

The party will be an informal one and everyone is invited.

Passing of Shanagolden.

The Shanagolden post office has been closed. This practically marks the passing of a prosperous little village which sprang up like a mushroom a few years ago. It boomed for a while when the Nash saw and shingle mills there were operated and had railway connections with Glidden. The sawmill was burned and the Nash people sold their timber to the Mellen Lbr. Co., which proceeded to ship the logs away. Recently the latter company transferred its shops, offices and warehouses to Glidden and now the post office department cannot get anyone there to accept the position of postmaster.

Potato Bake at Waupaca.

The Waupaca Advancement Association is going to have a two days carnival on Sept. 5th and 6th which they call The Big Potato Bake. There will be pyramids of hot baked potatoes and all kinds of attractions, including a decorated automobile parade or machine of the whole county, vegetable show, ball games and aeroplane flights. They wish to let people know that Waupaca County is doing something and is entitled to a place on the map.

Marshfield Fair a Success

The Marshfield fair was a pronounced success this year, both as an entertainment feature and as there were large crowds in attendance it is probable that the gate receipts were satisfactory also.

The special train that was run up from Nekoosa on Wednesday carried about seven hundred people, there being some three hundred from this city beside the others that were picked up along the line, the crowd making quite a showing.

One of the interesting features on Wednesday was the baseball game between Stevens Point and Grand Rapids, the two teams being old rivals, and the consequence was that a great deal of interest was taken in the matter. Grand Rapids cleaned up the Stevens Pointers to the tune of 8 to 1, with the famous Cy Young doing the twirling for Stevens Point, while Letson pitched for Grand Rapids.

Jimmie Ward, the aeroplane man, made some very successful flights, and this part of the show was fully up to what it had been advertised, and everybody was well pleased with this part of the entertainment.

There were some good races during the fair, and as the track was in good shape the time made was good.

Owing to the sickness of Prof. Merrill and the fact that several of the band boys were unable to get away on Wednesday, the Grand Rapids band did not go up as was intended, but the Port Edwards band was secured for the day and furnished very acceptable music.

Everybody was glad to see such a large attendance as it was hoped that the fair would be a financial success this year, as they have had several bad seasons.

That Income Tax.

Just about now many newspapers thruout the state are "explaining to their readers the workings of the income tax law." Some of them are explaining what a nuisance it is to the general public and how it is putting more of a burden on the poor man, while others are explaining what a good thing it is and how it is making the rich man pay his share of the taxes.

There isn't such a lot of explanation necessary and it is not hard to pick out those who are against the new law and those who are in favor of it. Those who have an income so small that they are not taxed by the law are pretty generlly in favor of it, while those who have a large income, large enough so that they have to pay a tax on it, are pretty generally against the new law.

While most of us are against almost any form of taxation, we all realize that taxes are necessary in order to keep things going, and that money must be raised by one method or another in order to keep the ship of state afloat.

It would seem as if the most equitable plan would be to tax a man on his income. Under this plan it does not matter whether he owns a cent's worth of property, if he has a large income, he has to donate his share toward the public good. Some men receive large salaries who never acquire any real estate to amount to anything, and very little personal property, and in the past such men have been escaping their share of the taxes, notwithstanding the fact that they have enjoyed all the benefits and advantages that go to make up life in a civilized community.

Under the new law these men will have to pay their share, which should prove a good thing to the small tax payer, who has heretofore carried a large share of the burden.

Highway Improvements.

The town of Dexter commenced the construction of some road under the state highway system last week, the work being in charge of Louis Amundson, supervisor of highways.

The new work will be done between the city of Pittsville and the village of Dexterville and will be constructed of decomposed granite, which, when put on top of a foundation of sand, makes a first class road.

The town has $1200 to spend this year and it is expected that this will construct about a mile of road. More than this could be built, but there is quite an extensive fill to make, which will use a part of the available money.

Death of Wm. Krause.

William Krause, a resident of the east side, died this morning of tumor of the brain after an illness of some length. Deceased was 30 years of age and is survived by three small children, his wife having died some time ago. Arrangements for the funeral have not been made at this writing, but it is expected that it will occur on Friday.

A. G. Turok of Milwaukee is spending a few days in the city the guest of Miss Mae Baruch.

NO MORE MAIL ON SUNDAYS.

Local Postmaster Receives Notice That Office Shall Remain Closed All Day.

Postmaster McDonald has received the following notice from the first assistant postmaster general, which is quite clear and concise, and not hard to interpret:

Postmaster.

Sir:—The post office appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, provides:

"That hereafter postoffices of the first and second classes shall not be open on Sundays for the purpose of delivering mail to the general public, but this provision shall not prevent the prompt delivery or special delivery mail."

Under this law you will close the general delivery, carriers' windows, and lock boxes and discontinue all deliveries by carriers on Sunday. You will note, however, that special delivery mail is excepted and you will therefore arrange to have on duty a sufficient force to handle this mail matter promptly.

The Department desires to reduce Sunday work to a minimum so that as many of the employees as possible may enjoy a complete day of rest on Sunday. You should, therefore, require only a sufficient number of clerks to report for duty on that day in order that transit mail and the mail collected for dispatch may be handled without delay: If no mail is dispatched on Sunday a very early collection should be made on Monday morning and the mail for local delivery distributed before the carriers leave for their first trip.

Respectfully,
C. P. Grandfield,
First Assistant Postmaster General.

The new ruling will go into effect in this city on the 8th of September, it being the intention to make the usual deliveries next Sunday. This is done so as to give the patrons of the office plenty of notice.

This is a ruling that should have been made years ago, for there is no reason why a man working in a postoffice should not have Sunday to himself the same as any other human being.

Death of Mrs. G. F. Steele.

Mrs. G. F. Steele, the wife of G. Frank Steele, formerly of Port Edwards but now of Cornell, Wis., died at Jamaica Plains, Mass., on August 4th of acute bright's disease. She was laid at rest by the side of her father and mother in Rutland, Vermont.

Mrs. Steele was born at Ludlow, Vermont, and came to Wisconsin to take charge of the music department in Lawrence University at Appleton in 1880. Three years later she was married to G. F. Steele, who soon after came to Centralia to build and operate the south side paper mill, the first mill of that kind in this section of the state. During their stay Mrs. Steele was well known in this city and her old friends often speak of her as a woman of high ideals, refinement and culture. During the later years of her life she was in poor health.

She is survived by her husband and four children, Mrs. Murray Ross of Boston, Roderick living in Tucumcari, N. M., Katherine and Dorothy who are in the east planning on going to LaSalle Seminary at Auburndale, Mass., the coming year.

Dewey-Baker.

Rev. George E. Dewey of this city and Miss Kathryn Agnes Baker of of Plainfield, Wis., were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents in that village on Wednesday last. Rev. M. B. Milne, the Baptist pastor of our city, officiated.

The bride has been a successful teacher in the Almond and Rosendale public schools. The groom is well known in certain circles, having lived here several years. He is engaged in missionary work mostly for the American Sunday School Union. They will live on Lee Street in this city.

We join with their friends in wishing them both a long and pleasant journey thru life.

Two Holidays in Succession.

All the banks in Grand Rapids will be closed both Labor Day and Primary Election Day, Sept. 2nd and 3rd.

These are both legal holidays and as it is difficult for a bank to transact business on a legal holiday most of the banks in the state will be closed on the dates mentioned.

It will be well to keep this in mind and not arrange to do any banking business on those days. Notes maturing on a legal holiday are due the next succeeding business day.

Don't Like the Turkey Trot.

Waupaca Leader:—The Bunny Hug, Texas Tommy, the Grizzly Bear and the Turkey Trot are all very well in their way, but may become a trifle too "snappy" for the Lakes people. One night last week the dancing at Grand View was interrupted by the advent of a number of tennis players from the Waupaca tournament, who proceeded to set forth the various "Bunny, Grizzly and Turkey" dances in a very animated way. Fond parents led their children to bed early that night and the dance was broken up by 9 o'clock.

Clarence B. Edwards, Democratic Candidate for District Attorney, September Primaries

I respectfully solicit the support of the voters of Wood county for the nomination, on the Democratic ticket, to the office of District Attorney, and trust that each voter will consider this as much a personal request for his vote as if I had personally seen him and ask him to vote for me.

I have always been a Democrat, and in every campaign have done what I could for the Democratic party and its candidates. I have never held county office. I am a graduate of the Academic and Law departments of the University of Wisconsin, and have practiced law in the city of Marshfield for the past twelve years. "The Divorce Question."

—In the midst of all the theatrical frivolity comes a play now and then with a moral, a play with and for a purpose and written with the intention of enlightening a class on a subject that hitherto had received but little thought despite surrounding conditions.

"The Divorce Question" by William Anthony McGuire a powerfully written play taking the stand of the Catholic Church's opposition to divorce, and proving conclusively that divorce does not obtain the conditions sought for and particularly is emphasized the parents duty to the children. This strikingly original play will be seen at Daly's Theatre on Friday, Sept. 6 under the direction of Rowland and Clifford.

Uniform Express Way-Bills.

After Sept. 1 all express companies will use a uniform way bill with one color for charges paid shipments and another for charges collect shipments.

All shipments on which the charges have been paid by the shipper will be billed with a goldenrod yellow way-bill and will bear a goldenrod label and also a copy of the waybill, pasted to the package and goldenrod in color. Shipments on which the charges are to be collected when delivered will have white way bills and white labels. Under this uniform system a glance will show the person receiving the packages whether it is prepaid or not and there will be no excuse for paying drivers on prepaid shipments.

Church Notice.

On Tuesday evening of this week beginning at 7:30 there was held a meeting in the Sunday School Assembly room of the Congregational church to plan for the state convention and to appoint such committees as may be necessary to arrange for the reception and entertainment of delegates. The convention will begin on Friday evening, Sept. 13th and close Monday evening, Sept. 16th. About 250 clergymen and lay delegates are expected.

Next Sunday there will be services morning and evening in the Congregational church. The pastor will preach at both services.

Damaged by Lightning.

The dwelling house of Horace Barrett was struck by lightning last night and damaged to some extent.

The house of W. A. Drumb was also struck during the electric storm and damaged somewhat and set on fire, but the flames were extinguished with little damage.

One of the chimneys on F. J. Wood's residence was demolished by the lightning and other damage done.

Lightning struck L. M. Nash's big barn near Junction City and knocked the cupals off but did not burn the barn. The building had some 200 tons of hay in it at the time and it was lucky to escape being destroyed by fire.

TENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The Catholic Societies of this city are making preparations for the Tenth Annual Convention of the Wisconsin Federation of Catholic Societies, which is to meet here next Sunday and Monday, Sept. 1st and 2nd. The Most Rev. S. G. Messmer D. D. archbishop of Milwaukee, Rt. Rev. Jas. Schwebach D. D. bishop of LaCrosse, Rt. Rev. J. Fox D. D. bishop of Green Bay and a large number of priests and delegates representing Catholics ocieties of various parts of the state will be in attendance.

It is not a political organization and does not control the political affiliations of its members; it asks no favors or privileges, but openly proclaims what is fair and just. It aims at the creation of sound public opinion on all important topics of the day; it stands for christian life of the nation itself; for the proper observance of Sunday, christian education of youth, sanctity and perpetuity of christian marriage, and the safeguarding of the christian home.

It asserts the necessity of christian principles in social and public life, in the state, in business and in all financial and industrial relations. It combats all errors which are in opposition to christianity and threaten to undermine the very foundation of human society.

It is to cooperate with all loyal citizens and with all civic and social energies which work for truth and virtue. It exposes falsehoods and injustice whether in misrepresentation of history, doctrine, or moral principles. The aims of the Federation, therefore, are religious and patriotic. They are the interest of all American citizens, especially of those who believe in a Divine Lawgiver and in the revelation of a Divine Religion through Christ the Savior.

Gave a Good Concert.

The audience that assembled at Daly's Theatre on Friday evening to listen to the concert given by Misses Knoller, Wedge and Hein was not as large as it should have been considering the merit of the different numbers, but it is safe to say that every number was thoroly appreciated by those in attendance.

Miss Hattie B. Hein is from Stevens Point and is a pianist of more than ordinary ability, and rendered several solos during the evening in a masterly manner. She is also a violinist and handled this most difficult of all instruments in a manner that was most pleasing to the audience.

Miss Mabel Manning Wedge was the vocalist of the evening and she has a most charming voice and had to respond to several encores before the audience was satisfied.

Miss Knoller rendered a piano solo, with accompaniement on another piano and her work was such as would please anybody who is a lover of music. Taken altogther, it was a first class concert, and the only thing to regret was that there were not more music lovers of the city present to hear it.

Reconstruction at Black River Falls.

Black River Falls Banner:—It almost makes one dizzy to get up where he can see and witness the rush and hurry that is constantly going on in the reconstruction of our city. Loads of stone, sand, dirt, lumber, brick, cement blocks and all the material used in the preparing and for the construction of the new buildings are moving in every direction. Workingmen of all kinds are busy as bees and a birdseye view would represent the work of an ant hill on one of their busy days.

It took but a few hours to complete the destruction of our city last fall, but it is taking months—indeed it may take years—to get back anywhere near a semblance of what it was on the morning of the 6th of last October. But we are on the highway to restoration and the people are all showing good pluck and are sure to succeed.

Dancing Party at the Pavilion.

A dancing party is announced for Thursday evening of this week at the Pavilion for the benefit of the Federation.

It is expected that a large number will attend for thus far this summer the weather has not been propitious and few parties have been held.

The price of admission will be fifty cents for each person and this will include refreshments, which will be served.

The Saecker Orchestra has been secured for the occasion. Dancing will begin at eight thirty and continue until one o'clock when the last cars will leave.

The party will be an informal one and everyone is invited.

Passing of Shanagolden.

The Shanagolden post office has been closed. This practically marks the passing of a prosperous little village which sprang up like a mushroom a few years ago. It boomed for a while when the Nash saw and shingle mills there were operated and had railway connections with Glidden. The sawmill was burned and the Nash people sold their timber to the Mellen Lbr. Co., which proceeded to ship the logs away. Recently the latter company transferred its shops, offices and warehouses to Glidden and now the post office department cannot get anyone there to accept the position of postmaster.

Potato Bake at Waupaca.

The Waupaca Advancement Association is going to have a two days carnival on Sept. 5th and 6th which they call The Big Potato Bake. There will be pyramids of hot baked potatoes and all kinds of attractions, including a decorated automobile parade or machine of the whole county, vegetable show, ball games and aeroplane flights. They wish to let people know that Waupaca County is doing something and is entitled to a place on the map.

Marshfield Fair a Success

The Marshfield fair was a pronounced success this year, both as an entertainment feature and as there were large crowds in attendance it is probable that the gate receipts were satisfactory also.

The special train that was run up from Nekoosa on Wednesday carried about seven hundred people, there being some three hundred from this city beside the others that were picked up along the line, the crowd making quite a showing.

One of the interesting features on Wednesday was the baseball game between Stevens Point and Grand Rapids, the two teams being old rivals, and the consequence was that a great deal of interest was taken in the matter. Grand Rapids cleaned up the Stevens Pointers to the tune of 8 to 1, with the famous Oy Young doing the twirling for Stevens Point, while Letson pitched for Grand Rapids.

Jimmie Ward, the aeroplane man, made some very successful flights, and this part of the show was fully up to what it had been advertised, and everybody was well pleased with this part of the entertainment.

There were some good races during the fair, and as the track was in good shape the time made was good.

Owing to the sickness of Prof. Merrill and the fact that several of the band boys were unable to get away on Wednesday, the Grand Rapids band did not go up as was intended, but the Port Edwards band was secured for the day and furnished very acceptable music.

Everybody was glad to see such a large attendance as it was hoped that the fair would be a financial success this year, as they have had several bad seasons.

That Income Tax.

Just about now many newspapers thruout the state are "explaining to their readers the workings of the income tax law." Some of them are explaining what a nuisance it is to the general public and how it is putting more of a burden on the poor man, while others are explaining what a good thing it is and how it is making the rich man pay his share of the taxes.

There isn't such a lot of explanation necessary and it is not hard to pick out those who are against the new law and those who are in favor of it. Those who have an income so small that they are not taxed by the law are pretty generlly in favor of it, while those who have a large income, large enough so that they have to pay a tax on it, are pretty generally against the new law.

While most of us are against almost any form of taxation, we all realize that taxes are necessary in order to keep things going, and that money must be raised by one method or another in order to keep the ship of state afloat.

It would seem as if the most equitable plan would be to tax a man on his income. Under this plan it does not matter whether he owns a cent's worth of property, if he has a large income, he has to donate his share toward the public good. Some men receive large salaries who never acquire any real estate to amount to anything, and very little personal property, and in the past such men have been escaping their share of the taxes, notwithstanding the fact that they have enjoyed all the benefits and advantages that go to make up life in a civilized community.

Under the new law these men will have to pay their share, which should prove a good thing to the small tax payer, who has heretofore carried a large share of the burden.

Highway Improvements.

The town of Dexter commenced the construction of some road under the state highway system last week, the work being in charge of Louis Amundson, supervisor of highways.

The new work will be done between the city of Pittsville and the village of Dexterville and will be constructed of decomposed granite, which, when put on top of a foundation of sand, makes a first class road.

The town has $1200 to spend this year and it is expected that this will construct about a mile of road. More than this could be built, but there is quite an extensive fill to make, which will use a part of the available money.

Death of Wm. Krause.

William Krause, a resident of the east side, died this morning of tumor of the brain after an illness of some length. Deceased was 30 years of age and is survived by three small children, his wife having died some time ago. Arrangements for the funeral have not been made at this writing, but it is expected that it will occur on Friday.

A. G. Turek of Milwaukee is spending a few days in the city the guest of Miss Mae Baruch.

NO MORE MAIL ON SUNDAYS.

Local Postmaster Receives Notice That Office Shall Remain Closed All Day.

Postmaster McDonald has received the following notice from the first assistant postmaster general, which is quite clear and concise, and not hard to interpret:

Postmaster.

Sir:—The post office appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, provides:

"That hereafter postoffices of the first and second classes shall not be open on Sundays for the purpose of delivering mail to the general public, but this provision shall not prevent the prompt delivery or special delivery mail."

Under this law you will close the general delivery, carriers' windows, and lock boxes and discontinue all deliveries by carriers on Sunday. You will note, however, that special delivery mail is excepted and you will therefore arrange to have on duty a sufficient force to handle this mail matter promptly.

The Department desires to reduce Sunday work to a minimum so that as many of the employees as possible may enjoy a complete day of rest on Sunday. You should, therefore, require only a sufficient number of clerks to report for duty on that day in order that transit mail and the mail collected for dispatch may be handled without delay: If no mail is dispatched on Sunday a very early collection should be made on Monday morning and the mail for local delivery distributed before the carriers leave for their first trip.

Respectfully,
O. P. Grandfield,
First Assistant Postmaster General.

The new ruling will go into effect in this city on the 8th of September, it being the intention to make the usual deliveries next Sunday. This is done so as to give the patrons of the office plenty of notice.

This is a ruling that should have been made years ago, for there is no reason why a man working in a postoffice should not have Sunday to himself the same as any other human being.

Death of Mrs. G. F. Steele.

Mrs. G. F. Steele, the wife of G. Frank Steele, formerly of Port Edwards but now of Cornell, Wis., died at Jamaica Plains, Mass., on August 4th of acute bright's disease. She was laid at rest by the side of her father and mother in Rutland, Vermont.

Mrs. Steele was born at Ludlow, Vermont, and came to Wisconsin to take charge of the music department in Lawrence University at Appleton in 1880. Three years later she was married to G. F. Steele, who soon after came to Centralia to build and operate the south side paper mill, the first mill of that kind in this section of the state. During their stay Mrs. Steele was well known in this city and her old friends often speak of her as a woman of high ideals, refinement and culture. During the later years of her life she was in poor health.

She is survived by her husband and four children, Mrs. Murray Ross of Boston, Roderick living in Tucumcari, N. M., Katherine and Dorothy who are in the east planning on going to LaSalle Seminary at Auburndale, Mass., the coming year.

Dewey-Baker.

Rev. George E. Dewey of this city and Miss Kathryn Agnes Baker of of Plainfield, Wis., were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents in that village on Wednesday last. Rev. M. B. Milne, the Baptist pastor of our city, officiated.

The bride has been a successful teacher in the Almond and Rosendale public schools. The groom is well known in certain circles, having lived here several years. He is engaged in missionary work mostly for the American Sunday School Union. They will live on Lee Street in this city.

We join with their friends in wishing them both a long and pleasant journey thru life.

Two Holidays in Succession.

All the banks in Grand Rapids will be closed both Labor Day and Primary Election Day, Sept. 2nd and 3rd.

These are both legal holidays and as it is difficult for a bank to transact business on a legal holiday most of the banks in the state will be closed on the dates mentioned.

It will be well to keep this in mind and not arrange to do any banking business on those days. Notes maturing on a legal holiday are due the next succeeding business day.

Don't Like the Turkey Trot.

Waupaca Leader:—The Bunny Hug, Texas Tommy, the Grizzly Bear and the Turkey Trot are all very well in their way, but may become a trifle too "snappy" for the Lakes people. One night last week the dancing at Grand View was interrupted by the advent of a number of tennis players from the Waupaca tournament, who proceeded to set forth the various "Bunny, Grizzly and Turkey" dances in a very animated way. Fond parents led their children to bed early that night and the dance was broken up by 9 o'clock.

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.

It is a matter of common experience that bright lights in a chamber, church or hall where numerous persons are gathered together have the effect of producing drowsiness among certain members of the congregation or audience, says the Philadelphia Press. This phenomenon is easily explained by the current knowledge of hypnotism. The drowsiness produced by the lights is a species of hypnosis. It has been suggested also that lack of proper ventilation causes a toxic quality in the atmosphere to which some people are especially susceptible, the result being an irresistible drowsiness. Sleeping in church has always been a ready subject for humor. It is related that on one occasion when a proposal was under discussion to have a series of sermons preached on topics of the day which were agitating the public minds, Rufus Choate, as a member of the congregation, protested vehemently, saying, "I seek my pew, as I seek my bed, for repose." There is also an anecdote of an old Scotchman who was asked if he knew a certain man in the same neighborhood. "Know him?" he replied with emphasis. "Why, I've sleepit in the same kirk wi' him for forr-ty year." But the majority of preachers have never been inclined to take a humorous view of the matter, any more than Dean Swift.

"The law does not permit a man to leave his wife just because she nags him," Justice Marean decides. He meant, of course, the law of this state, says the New York Mail. In Kentucky, Missouri and other states, "ungovernable temper" and "indignities" are a cause not only for separation, but for absolute divorce and nagging may certainly be carried to the point of indignity; while in Oregon one may obtain a divorce if the partner of one's joys, and especially of one's sorrows, "makes life burdensome." And what can be more burdensome than nagging? However, there ought not to be divorce, nor even separation, for nagging, because no court of justice can ever be sure that the nagging is not justified, or at least provoked. Some women, for instance, are born naggers. Some achieve nagging, and a considerable numbers of others have nagging thrust upon them by a course of conduct which may be outwardly courteous, but which in its essence is insupportably irritating.

Boston is to have a hospital for "the blues," the first of the kind in the world The institution will be psychopathic, though markedly different in scope from the wards of that name attached to Bellevue hospital in New York city. The hospital for "the blues" will be a branch of the Boston State hospital and will be conducted on the theory that all insanity cases are simply forms of physical sickness which can be alleviated with proper treatment. To that end the place will be a sort of clearing-house for those whose brains are out of gear. They will be differentiated and classified, according to the kinds of mental diseases they show, and remedies will be sought for each class of patients. There will be an out-patient department, for dealing with incipient insanity, and it is expected that this branch of the work will afford striking opportunities for the relief of many mildly insane persons without subjecting them to the stigma of insanity.

A Yonkers policeman saved about 30 people from death or injury when he picked up a dynamite bomb placed against a hotel and pinched out the fuse, which was within an inch of the explosion point. ONE of the interesting sights at the water carnival, recently held at Chicago, was the "Lad" a miniature reproduction of the Mississippi river packets Its owner and captain is Dr. J W. "Lad" is a converted towboat with gasoline motor, the smokestacks being only ornaments The boat measures 57 feet in length.

GENERAL BOOTH DEAD

FOUNDER OF SALVATION ARMY SUCCUMBS, AGED 84.

Aged Evangelist Has Steadily Failed Since the Operation on His Eye Last May.

He has been ailing since last spring. In May he underwent an operation for the removal of a cataract in the left eye The operation was not successful and since that time the aged evangelist has been steadily failing. General Booth was in his eighty-fourth year.

Gen. William Booth, who developed the greatest organized movement since the beginning of Christianity for the saving of human souls, was a son of a Nottingham (Eng.) carpenter He was born in that city on April 10, 1828.

He chose preaching for a profession and studied theology under a private tutor for the Methodist New Connection church. In 1852 he entered the ministry but was not formally ordained until six years later.

In the meantime he was appointed to do circuit work, but he had received a taste of evangelism and it appealed to him.

On July 5, 1865, General Booth took the first step which led afterwards to the founding of the Salvation Army

From an humble beginning in London this great organization has grown until it has 8,972 corps, circles and societies established in 56 countries and colonies with about 21,203 officers and employes In almost every city of consequence there is a branch with barracks where beds are maintained and food is dispensed at a very cheap rate

As a concrete example of the material benefits of the army 6,327,349 persons are supplied with beds in a single year while in the same length of time nearly 12 000,000 are fed

General Booth has made a number of trips to the United States and has sent a number of "messages" to the American people upon various occasions

Are Even More Beautiful Then Their Circassian Sisters.

But Beware of These Beauties, As They Also Have a Violent Temper and May Place a Yataghan Between Your Shoulders.

Tizi-Ouzou, Kabylia.—Though the Mauresques of Algeria and the unhaired beauties of Circassia combine a remarkable loveliness of features and complexion with a certain voluptuous elegance, they compare with the dignified, graceful, insolent Kabyle women very much as the show girls of a light opera chorus compare with the star.

Even the humblest peasant girl, grinding the family flour between the upper and the nether stone in the doorway of a mud hovel, possesses a distinction of form and feature which would attract attention in any assemblage. With all her dignity, however, the Kabyle woman does not rise superior to the African's fondness for personal adornment, being so laden with bracelets, anklets and necklaces of gold, silver, turquoise and coral that when she moves she sounds like an approaching team in hand Her approach is likewise heralded by the reek of an exotic and almost overpowering perfume, which like the celebrated parfum de Bey of Tunis, is composed of nearly a score of blended scents, the odor changing from carnation to heliotrope, to rose, to violet, and so on, every few minutes.

Lest this glowing description of their charms should start you posthaste for Kabylia, let me warn you that these insolent-eyed beauties are headstrong and hot of temper, and that if you happened to say the wrong thing to them it is more than probable that you would find the double-bladed yataghan, which every Kabyle maiden wears very much as an American girls wears a bunch of violets, planted between your shoulders

They are fond of cold steel, are these Kabyles, for at the conclusion of a wedding ceremony the bridegroom, walking backward, holds aloft a naked dagger, and the bride, following him, keeps the point of it between her teeth. Another marriage custom of Kabylia, even more barbaric, consists in the part martyrdom of the bridee, who, clad in her wedding finery, stands through an entire morning against a pillar in the village square, her eyes closed, her arms pressed to her sides and with only the narrow base of the column for a foothold, the while a ring of villagers criticise and comment on her appearance. I might add that, despite the stern stuff of which the Kabyle women are made, the bride usually faints during the ordeal.

Typical Kabyle Woman.

If, after learning of these quaint whims and customs, you wish to see the Kabyle women with your own eyes, you have only to take passage to Algiers and a train thence, for some twenty-odd hours, over a railway which appears to be suffering from convulsions, to its terminus at Tizi-Ouzou. Thence, on horseback, astride of a donkey or afoot, but always with your Arab guide in front of you and with your hand in your jacket pocket, and in that hand a serviceable revolver, you can penetrate with greater or less safety into those wild fastnesses of the Atlas range, where one can buy a dozen beauties outright for the price of a limousine motor car.—Metropolitan.

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.

It is a matter of common experience that bright lights in a chamber, church or hall where numerous persons are gathered together have the effect of producing drowsiness among certain members of the congregation or audience, says the Philadelphia Press. This phenomenon is easily explained by the current knowledge of hypnotism. The drowsiness produced by the lights is a species of hypnosis. It has been suggested also that lack of proper ventilation causes a toxic quality in the atmosphere to which some people are especially susceptible, the result being an irresistible drowsiness. Sleeping in church has always been a ready subject for humor. It is related that on one occasion when a proposal was under discussion to have a series of sermons preached on topics of the day which were agitating the public minds, Rufus Choate, as a member of the congregation, protested vehemently, saying, "I seek my pow, as I seek my bed, for repose." There is also an anecdote of an old Scotchman who was asked if he knew a certain man in the same neighborhood. "Know him?" he replied with emphasis. "Why, I've sleepit in the same kirk wi' him for forr-ty year." But the majority of preachers have never been inclined to take a humorous view of the matter, any more than Dean Swift.

"The law does not permit a man to leave his wife just because she nags him," Justice Marean decides. He meant, of course, the law of this state, says the New York Mail. In Kentucky, Missouri and other states, "ungovernable temper" and "indignities" are a cause not only for separation, but for absolute divorce and nagging may certainly be carried to the point of indignity; while in Oregon one may obtain a divorce if the partner of one's joys, and especially of one's sorrows, "makes life burdensome." And what can be more burdensome than nagging? However, there ought not to be divorce, nor even separation, for nagging, because no court of justice can ever be sure that the nagging is not justified, or at least provoked. Some women, for instance, are born naggers. Some achieve nagging, and a considerable numbers of others have nagging thrust upon them by a course of conduct which may be outwardly courteous, but which in its essence is insupportably irritating.

Boston is to have a hospital for "the blues," the first of the kind in the world. The institution will be psychopathic, though markedly different in scope from the wards of that name attached to Bellevue hospital in New York city. The hospital for "the blues" will be a branch of the Boston State hospital and will be conducted on the theory that all insanity cases are simply forms of physical sickness which can be alleviated with proper treatment. To that end the place will be a sort of clearing-house for those whose brains are out of gear. They will be differentiated and classified, according to the kinds of mental diseases they show, and remedies will be sought for each class of patients. There will be an out-patient department, for dealing with incipient insanity, and it is expected that this branch of the work will afford striking opportunities for the relief of many mildly insane persons without subjecting them to the stigma of insanity.

STORM CAUSES DEATH AND DESTRUCTION IN MICHIGAN AND INDIANA

Railroad Tracks Inundated—Big $1,000,000 Dam Breaks—Three Men Struck by Lightning—Fourteen Inches of Rain is Recorded.

Niles, Mich., Aug. 20.—Confined in its devastating effects to an area within a radius of three miles of this city, a phenomenally heavy cloudburst Sunday caused the death of two persons, injuries to many others, washed out seven railway bridges, destroyed miles of railroad tracks, stopped street car traffic in Niles and other towns, held up trains of the Big Four and the Michigan Central and did hundreds of thousands of dollars damage.

Fourteen inches of rain fell in Niles and the neighborhood. The following were killed by lightning:

Otto Seaver, thirty-four years old; farmer near Niles.

Billwoch, seventy years old; farmer near Niles.

Charles W. Hushower, a railroad official from South Bend, was driving near here in an automobile with three expert linemen when the entire party was struck by lightning. Hushower and the three linemen were severely injured and rendered unconscious.

Abraham Harrod of Niles was also struck by lightning and rendered unconscious while he was driving his machine on the highway on the road to South Bend.

The million-dollar dam of the Chapin Power company on the St. Joseph river, which was erected recently by Chicago capitalists for the purpose of supplying electric power to South Bend, Mishawaka, Elkhart and St. Joseph, threatens to break, and hundreds of men with sandbags endeavored to save it.

Other hundreds of workmen worked desperately to save the big dam built by the city of Niles, which supplies power for the electric lighting and traction companies.

All the bridges on the Big Four and Michigan Central railroads for a distance of three miles east and west of this city have been destroyed by the cloudburst, and scores of freight cars have been swept into the St. Joseph river. The Michigan Central railroad yards, covering six acres, are under water.

The dam of the Cantrell Flour company at Niles burst, and the mill and other buildings for half a mile around were flooded.

Nine cars full of animals and effects belonging to the Tiger Bill circus, which was to appear at Benton Harbor, is stalled in three feet of water near here.

Interurban street car service between Niles and St. Joseph and other towns is entirely stopped. Great damage has been done to telephone and telegraph wires.

GENERAL BOOTH DEAD

FOUNDER OF SALVATION ARMY SUCCUMBS, AGED 84.

Aged Evangelist Has Steadily Failed Since the Operation on His Eye Last May.

He has been ailing since last spring. In May he underwent an operation for the removal of a cataract in the left eye. The operation was not successful and since that time the aged evangelist has been steadily failing. General Booth was in his eighty-fourth year.

Gen. William Booth, who developed the greatest organized movement since the beginning of Christianity for the saving of human souls, was a son of a Nottingham (Eng.) carpenter. He was born in that city on April 10, 1828.

He chose preaching for a profession and studied theology under a private tutor for the Methodist New Connection church. In 1852 he entered the ministry but was not formally ordained until six years later.

In the meantime he was appointed to do circuit work, but he had received a taste of evangelism and it appealed to him.

On July 5, 1865, General Booth took the first step which led afterwards to the founding of the Salvation Army.

From an humble beginning in London this great organization has grown until it has 8,972 corps, circles and societies established in 56 countries and colonies with about 21,203 officers and employes. In almost every city of consequence there is a branch with barracks where beds are maintained and food is dispensed at a very cheap rate.

As a concrete example of the material benefits of the army 6,327,349 persons are supplied with beds in a single year while in the same length of time nearly 12,000,000 are fed.

General Booth has made a number of trips to the United States and has sent a number of "messages" to the American people upon various occasions.

They were disarmed and placed under guard, being given no intimation of what their fate was to be. Soon after darkness fell the insurgents set upon their prisoners, shooting and stabbing them to death and subjecting to hideous tortures. Only seventy men of the entire garrison escaped.

The vote on the wool bill veto was 39 to 36. Six Republicans voted with the Democrats. These were: Bristow, Clapp, Crawford, Poindexter, Works and La Follette.

The Democrats agreed by a vote of 143 to 86 to a substitute offered by Chairman Moon of the postoffice committee, creating an experimental parcels post system in lieu of the permanent "zone system," which was offered in the senate by Senator Bourne and passed.

WOMEN OF KABYLIA

Are Even More Beautiful Than Their Circassian Sisters.

But Beware of These Beauties, As They Also Have a Violent Temper and May Place a Yataghan Between Your Shoulders.

Tizi-Ouzou, Kabylia.—Though the Mauresques of Algeria and the fair-haired beauties of Circassia combine a remarkable loveliness of features and complexion with a certain voluptuous elegance, they compare with the dignified, graceful, insolent Kabyle women very much as the show girls of a light opera chorus compare with the star.

Even the humblest peasant girl, grinding the family flour between the upper and the nether stone in the doorway of a mud hovel, possesses a distinction of form and feature which would attract attention in any assemblage. With all her dignity, however, the Kabyle woman does not rise superior to the African's fondness for personal adornment, being so laden with bracelets, anklets and necklaces of gold, silver, turquoise and coral that when she moves she sounds like an approaching four-in-hand. Her approach is likewise heralded by the reek of an exotic and almost overpowering perfume, which, like the celebrated parfum de Rey of Tunis, is composed of nearly a score of blended scents, the odor changing from carnation to heliotrope, to rose, to violet, and so on, every few minutes.

Lest this glowing description of their charms should start you post-haste for Kabylia, let me warn you that these insolent-eyed beauties are headstrong and hot of temper, and that if you happened to say the wrong thing to them it is more than probable that you would find the double-bladed yataghan, which every Kabyle maiden wears very much as an American girls wears a bunch of violets, planted between your shoulders.

They are fond of cold steel, are these Kabyles, for at the conclusion of a wedding ceremony the bridegroom, walking backward, holds aloft a naked dagger, and the bride, following him, keeps the point of it between her teeth. Another marriage custom of Kabylia, even more barbaric, consists in the part martyrdom of the bridge, who, clad in her wedding finery, stands through an entire morning against a pillar in the village square, her eyes closed, her arms pressed to her sides and with only the narrow base of the column for a foothold, the while a ring of villagers criticise and comment on her appearance. I might add that, despite the stern stuff of which the Kabyle women are made, the bride usually faints during the ordeal.

Typical Kabyle Woman.

If, after learning of these quaint whims and customs, you wish to see the Kabyle women with your own eyes, you have only to take passage to Algiers and a train thence, for some twenty-odd hours, over a railway which appears to be suffering from convulsions, to its terminus at Tizi-Ouzou. Thence, on horseback, astride of a donkey or afoot, but always with your Arab guide in front of you and with your hand in your jacket pocket, and in that hand a serviceable revolver, you can penetrate with greater or less safety into those wild fastnesses of the Atlas range, where one can buy a dozen beauties outright for the price of a limousine motor car.—Metropolitan.

ROOKERIES FOR WILD BIRDS

New York.—The National Association of Audubon Societies as part of its conservation plan hopes to obtain for the wild water birds of North America permanent and undisputed possession of the islands, marshes and lakes where their largest colonies are found. The societies have obtained either by purchase or gift some of the most populous rookeries left in Maine, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana.

It is hoped that in the next few weeks other rookeries equally important with these will be taken over by the organizations.

Cow Produces 33 Pounds of Butter.

Newark, N. J.—To Valdessa Scott II., a Holstain Friesian, owned by Bernard Meyer of Finderne, N. J., goes the honor of being the best dairy cow in the world. The cow has just completed a seven-day official record in which she produced 695.9 pounds of milk, 33.59 pounds of butter fat and 41.87 pounds of butter.

Maids "Not Gadabouts" Get Cash.

London.—Money gifts left by Isaac Duckett for maid servants who can prove long service with the same family and are not gossips or gadabouts, were distributed in the parish of St. Andrew's, Holborn, London, the other day.

Killed by Riding Into Wire.

Avon Smith, a young lad of Dinuba, Colo., rode against a barbed-wire which was stretched across a road and cut his throat from ear to ear. Young Smith was riding in the early twilight to the home of a neighbor, and took a road through an open field —one which he has traveled for several years—unaware that a wire had been stretched across the highway that afternoon to keep out teams. The wire was stretched taut and at just a height to strike him across the throat.

The Burgoyne-Hayes Dinner

By Melville Davisson Post

Copyright by Edward J Clode

The dinner given by Mrs. Burgoyne-Hayes to Prince Edward of Hesse Mechel-Schweren will be always remembered by New York. The proud old dowager cut society like a butcher. The list was a streak of blood. No massacre of King Philip's war ever left more savagery skulking in the bushes. The terrible old woman openly declared that she intended to give New York the bayonet, as her great relative did in 1777.

I shall always remember this dinner for another reason. It was the first appearance in America of Beatrix Waldo after her marriage with Capt. Gordon Smith of his majesty's lines in South Africa There were a lot of floating, disconnected rumors about this marriage. Beatrix certainly posed as an heiress before the Englishman went under the yoke, and we got the impression, doubtless directly, that he had a large estate somewhere on Loch Codan, £5,000, at any rate, over his pay. Then we heard later on, through Jimmie Dale, I think—he always knew the foreign gossip—that the Englishman did not have a brass farthing over his pay, and was rather worse off than that by a fat budget of debts. We knew that Beatrix had no income to speak of—her aunt kept the gown-makers going for her. There were wild lands, back inland somewhere, that Beatrix used to turn into oil, coal and spruce lumber when she got to dreaming, but the over-dramed old aunt used to pay taxes on them, and I think that was about the only reminder of the fortune that ever came along to New York.

I had Sarah Lamarr on my right at this dinner, and, fortunately, an impossible German person on her right, who kept his nose well in his wines and pates I wanted to ask Sarah Lemarr about Beatrix, and was glad of the Teuton's exclusive interest in his stomach. I shared a rather general curiosity. The Englishman was here with Beatrix, putting in his leave of absence. If they mooned for vanished Eldorados, one saw no tear-stains in it. I thought the pair of them at the far end of the table looked happy enough, pretty comfortable for disillusioned fortune hunters. Presently I got Sarah Lemarr to myself, and was about to inquire into the mystery when she took the very subject from the tip of my tongue.

"I have been hoping for a word with you, Courtlandt,' she said; "it's about Beatrix Smith She needs your assistance."

"I am not a divorce lawyer," I said.

"Nonsense, Courtlandt," she answered; "they love each other. They are lovers. Can you gather the significance of such an undreamed of ending to the effort each of them made to marry a fortune?"

"Then," I said, "Beatrix cannot need assistance. Poets tell us that lovers do not dwell in this land of trolley cars and spindles, but somewhere on blessed islands they are happy."

"But, my dear boy," said Sarah Lemarr, 'one might take a stone bruise or a thorn in the thumb even on a blessed island."

"Not so,' I answered; "the Well at the World's End is there, and whosoever tasteth thereof shall be perfect as his dreams are perfect, and around and all about this land Lethe, the River of Oblivion, rolls its watery labyrinth. Nay, do not interrupt me, the human heart longs with a longing that cannot be uttered for this enchanted country where, you tell me, Beatrix walks with her Englishman."

"Well!" said Sarah Lemarr. "Who is the girl, Courtlandt?"

"There you go," I said, "demonstrating the greatest unwritten truth about a woman; namely, that every reflection arises from a personal experience. If one deplores sin, he has robbed his employer in his youth; if one apostrophizes love, he is about to marry Miss Jones of Forty-eighth street. The girl in my case, dear Madame von Hubert, is that mysterious fairy-woman, daughter of Abu Jaffer, surnamed the Victorious, second Caliph of Bagdad under the dynasty of the Abbasides, asleep on her silk carpet in Arabia."

Here the impossible German person interrupted to inquire if I thought the truffles were canned. I did not think they were canned, and he was content; but the moment gave Sarah Lemarr a lead and she seized it with the practical directness of a New Bedford skipper.

"Now, Courtlandt," she said, "be sensible. Beatrix needs $40,000."

"How original of Beatrix," I replied. "Most of us need only a couple of hundred."

"If you are going to be nasty about it, Courtlandt," she said, "I will never speak to you again. You must help Beatrix to find this $40,000. The poor girl is dreadfully worried about it. You see, Courtlandt, when the two of them awoke after the honeymoon to find their estate all Castilian haze, instead of a conventional separation they fell in love with each other like a couple of Breton peasants Beatrix told me all about it; she is lovely. She does not want the money for herself; she wants it to pay Lieut. Gordon Smith's debts. When his debts are paid, he will be made a captain and transferred to his old regiment in India. Beatrix adores India; she is quite content to go out there and live quietly on a captain's pay, and love her big Englishman and be happy. But she wants his debts cleared off; 'his honor untarnished,' she calls it. It seems to mean a lot to her, and she is so absurdly in love with the tall soldier that it is enough to break a body's heart. Now, Courtlandt, where are we to get this money for her?"

"Unfortunately," I replied, "I do not at this moment think of a convenient orphan to rob. How would it do to rifle the poor box at St. Thomas'?"

Sarah Lemarr ignored my second offense after the manner of a woman, and, likewise, true to the same manner, gave the remainder of the story after having asked a decision in the midst of it

"You remember Beatrix owned several thousand acres of forest land back somewhere in the Alleghanies, in some county of the Virginias. Let—me—see, she said the name had been a fortunate one for the first Captain Smith in America, and ought not to fail the second one."

"Pocahontas," I suggested

"How stupid!" she said. "Of course, Pocahontas. Well, some lumber company has managed to steal half of Beatrix's land, and it, and some other rival companies, now want to buy the remainder of her. They will give $20,000. They have been dogging her footsteps ever since she landed in New York But this is only $20,000, and Beatrix needs $40,000 If she could get back the land which has been stolen, it would bring the other $20,000. I don't know how they managed to get it. Beatrix has the whole story in detail, with maps and so forth I think she failed to pay the taxes at some time, and they stole it that way. Now, Courtlandt, you must induce Mr Mason to get Beatrix's land for her. She is stopping with me, you know. Bring him to my house tomorrow for dinner. Lieut. Gordon Smith is going to Washington tomorrow to call on the British legation and will not return until very late; but he knows nothing about it Beatrix is the business agent for the pair of them"

I smiled at the artlessness of Mme von Hubert. "Certainly," I said, "but why not bring the man in the moon, too, and the Witch of Endor Randolph Mason is hardly the sort of person that goes out to dinner"

"Well, then," said Sarah Lemarr, "bring him after dinner. I will write him a little note."

I could have laughed in the girl's face. "What will you say in your little note?" I inquired.

'Oh, well, what any one would say," she answered, "that I wish to see him on an important business matter."

"And do you know," I said, "what would happen to your little note?"

"What would happen to it?" she said Her chin went up. She was a social overlord, this Mme. von Hubert. Her invitations were commands The social aspirant dreamed of their coming, as of that of Abou ben Adhem's Angel.

"This would happen," I answered "Randolph Mason would rip open the envelope with his long finger, fold back the paper where you creased it across the middle, and drop it into the waste basket."

A red flush sprang up along her dog collar of diamonds. I hurried to explain. "I beg your pardon," I said; "but you must think of Randolph Mason as you would of an eccentric scientist—Darwin or Agassiz—an intellectual recluse without emotions, a sort of Hindoo ascetic of a high order. You could not write any of these such a note, neither could you write such a not to him Now, there is a sort of note which you might write to any of these, and you might try such a note on him, although I have little hope of it."

Mme von Hubert's head was still in the air. "You mean," she said, "such a note ought to run: 'Will the ogre kindly meet a kissable fairy on the north side of the hawthorn thicket at moonrise?' I believe your scientist, no matter how old, usually comes out of his shell for this sort of thing." But she could not keep her exquisite good nature under a bushel for long. She began to laugh. "Really, Courtlandt, to be serious, what ought I to write him? We must have his help for Beatrix."

"The sort of note," I said, "that you would write to a famous archaeologist, if you wished him to call and examine a rare Egyptian pot, or to a numismatist if you possessed a coin of the time of Cyrus, or to a bacteriologist if you had a culture of the bubonic plague for him. Invite him to the examination of a case of rare and interesting injustice, at your residence on Eighty-sixth street at nine o'clock tomorrow night."

I was going on to explain about this note a little in detail, but the impossible German suddenly realized that he ought to talk, and at once set about it with the persistence and regularity of a man filing a saw. We resisted as long as we could, and then gave it up for another Sedan. We were rescued finally by Mme. Castaigne, who gave some fragments from Moliere. I tried to get a further word with Beatrix Smith, but Mrs. Burgoyne-Hayes descended on me.

"I must present you to the prince, Courtlandt," she said. "Your great-grandfather on your mother's side, I think, was a soldier of our King George."

"Yes, madam," I said, "but the grand duke of Hesse-Darmstadt drew his pay."

I did not see the note which Mme. von Hubert wrote to Randolph Mason; but it was effective. He requested me to return after dinner and accompany him to Eighty-sixth street. The von Huberts have a residence on Eighty-sixth street. We arrived there on the hour and were shown into the library. Randolph Mason at once sat down in a heavy black oak chair before the fire. This chair was a massive and curious piece. It was carved by the peasants of the Black Forest for the baron's grandfather. The tortuous shapes forming its arms and legs are like the gargoyles to be seen under the roofs of castles on the Rhine, and now and then in Paris.

I heard the latch of the door click, and looked up to see Beatrix Smith standing on the threshold, looking at Mason with profound interest. Her lips were parted and her eyes wide. She had not thought to come on this curious picture of the middle ages taken down from some Italian gallery and propped up here in the library of the von Huberts. She bowed to me, crossed the room and sat down by the library table a little beyond Randolph Mason, at the corner of the fire

Presently Mason looked up at her. "Is this Mme. von Hubert?" he said, without rising, without an inflection of interest or courtesy, as he would have said: "Is this the contract?" "The bond in question?"

She flushed a little. "No," she answered; "I am merely the interesting case that you came to examine into."

"Give me the details of it," said Mason

She began at once without introduction or verbiage and told her story with a brevity and directness that I could not associate with that rather silly Beatrix Waldo who used to go up and down through the drawing-rooms of Newport looking for a rich husband.

She had inherited from her father two thousand acres of wild forest land in the county of Pocahontas in the state of West Virginia. She and her aunt had watched it carefully and paid the taxes on it each year; they had even taken the little local newspaper, published at the county seat, in order that they might know what lands were returned delinquent for taxes and sold. They had been warned against the horde of dangerous and unscrupulous land thieves said to infest the mountain districts of the Virginias. But her great care was not sufficient against the ingenuity of these pirates. After one of the periodic assessments of real estate, one thousand acres of her estate were listed on the land books under the name of Waldeu, returned delinquent, and sold for taxes. The land was purchased by Gilbert Williams, president of the Black Creek Lumber company, for $36 85. She had paid no attention to the sale, not recognizing her land under this name until she came to have the estate surveyed a few months ago, some five or six years after its purchase at the tax sale by Gilbert Williams She also learned that the whole thing was a well planned and effective scheme of this owner of the Black Creek Lumber company to steal her land. These wild lands had vastly increased in value.

This company and a rival one, the Export Spruce company, were exceedingly anxious to purchase the remaining tract. They would give, she thought, twenty dollars an acre for it. The agents of the two companies had been at her heels ever since she arrived in New York. Gilbert Williams was now at the Fifth Avenue hotel. He had endeavored to reach her by telephone this very evening. He offered a little better price than the Export Spruce company, but he could well afford to, since he it was that had stolen half the land. The agent of the Export Spruce company was at the Holland. His note, on the table, requested an interview with her at any hour she would name, day or night. This indicated how very desirous they were for the land. Such a sale would yield her twenty thousand dollars. All the lands would have given her the forty thousand which she needed. Her name now was Beatrix Smith; she had married Lieutenant Gordon Smith the year before. He was in Washington today, but would return before eleven o'clock this night,

That was the whole history, brief, accurate and devoid of superfluous comment. She had there on the table the original deed, maps and tax receipts.

Mason's face showed marked annoyance, as that of an eminent surgeon would, who, having been sent for in hot haste, arrives to find the patient with a bumped nose.

"Why do you send for me?" he said; "any lawyer could adjust this problem."

"It is vital to me," replied the woman; "it means my happiness and my husband's career. I beg you to help me."

Her eyes began to fill up and her lips trembled with distress.

Randolph Mason gave no attention to the woman's emotions. He sat, beating the tips of his fingers on the arms of the chair, with evident annoyance.

"Let us get the thing over, then," he said. "Call up this man Gilbert Williams Say to him that Mrs. Smith has determined to sell the lands; ask him to come here at once with a notary."

"What!" cried Beatrix Smith, "sell the land to Williams" the man who robbed me! How can that help?"

"Madam," said Randolph Mason, "do not worry me with petty bickering."

I signaled Beatrix Smith to a conference with me in the hall "Do exactly as he says," I whispered when we were outside the door, "and hurry."

She promised and went swiftly upstairs to the telephone.

In a very few minutes Gilbert Williams arrived. He was a red-haired old fellow with a face like a fox, and beady eyes set obliquely in his head.

Randolph Mason arose when he came in, and explained that as Mrs. Smith wished to leave America at once, she had determined to sell her lands, provided cash was paid. The lands were worth thirty thousand dollars, but her husband was absent and could not convey his curtesy in the deed. She would therefore take twenty thousand cash and make a deed on the spot. Gilbert Williams snapped up the offer. He did not care anything about the curtesy of the husband. The land itself was worth nothing, the timber only was valuable. His mills would cut it off in a year, and he was willing to take the chance of Mrs. Smith's living that long. He produced a deed, which he had brought with him to New York, and ran a pen through the blank which it contained for the husband's name. Beatrix signed the deed, and the notary who accompanied Williams filled in the acknowledgment and affixed his seal in proper form.

Gilbert Williams wrote out a check on the Importers' Bank of Commerce for twenty thousand dollars. We ascertained by telephone to the cashier at his residence that the check was good. Williams then folded his deed, put it in his pocket and departed with the notary. The whole matter had taken less than twenty minutes to bring to a close.

Randolph Mason inquired at what hour Lieutenant Gordon Smith would arrive, and was told that he would be at the house at half-past ten. "Direct the agent of the Export Spruce company to be here at that hour," he said. Then he sat down in the oak chair before the fire.

We were all greatly puzzled. We did not see why this second purchaser should be invited to come. Beatrix Smith had nothing more to sell. The transaction seemed to us to have arrived at its final act, the curtain down and the lights out.

Sarah Lemarr came down to the hall and peeped through the door at Mason, where he sat motionless, his right elbow on the twisted arm of the grotesquely carved chair, his clenched fingers propping up his jaw.

"O Courtlandt," she whispered, "he is splendid! I think Lancelot must have looked like that when he sat in Arthur's double-dragoned chair to umpire the last tournament. Just fancy, with what freezing, acid irony he would have said, 'Hast thou won?' 'Art thou the purest brother?' to such an unconscionable rake as Tristan." Then she swore Beatrix to obedience and slipped back up the great stairway.

A few minutes after ten o'clock, Lieutenant Gordon Smith arrived, and, a little later, the agent of the Export Spruce company. Mason arose when this agent entered, and explained, as he had done to Gilbert Williams, that Mrs. Smith was about to sail for England, and had decided to sell her land. She would take twenty thousand dollars in cash for it, the deed to be executed and the money to be paid down. The agent agreed at once, and produced his deed He was prepared as Williams was. Mason directed Beatrix Smith and her husband to execute the deed. I had no end of trouble with Beatrix in the hall this time. She did not want to make another deed; she had sold her land; she would not rob the Export Spruce company It was not the company that had stolen her land; Mr. Mason had clearly gotten the two companies confused He was making an awful blunder. I must call him out and set him right about it.

Instead, I called Sarah Lemarr. She berated Beatrix like a pirate Disobey Randolph Mason? the thing was unthinkable! Make a mistake? not that big, fine, bronze god brooding by his sacred fire "Why, girl," she said, "I would shoot every one of you in your tracks if that man told me to do it He is adorable. I could follow him around like a dog and bite people if he whistled to me. Not another word out of you, or I will come down with the dog-whip." And she shook her little clenched hand over the banisters.

Finally we got the matter over. Beatrix and her husband executed the deed. I got a notary from the Plaza. The agent gave certified drafts on Dexter & Company for the twenty thousand dollars, and, like Gilbert Williams, folded his deed and departed.

Beatrix Smith bearded the lion with eyes swimming in tears. "Mr. Mason," she said, "you have made a terrible mistake The Export Spruce company is not the one who stole my land. I cannot take its money; it will not get the property." And she went on with a torrent of lamentation.

"Madam," said Mason, rising, "all this is drivel I have made no mistake. The Export Spruce company will get every acre that it has this night purchased." Then he directed Beatrix to cash the checks at the earliest hour in the morning and sail at once for England.

When we went down the steps to his carriage, Sarah Lemarr slipped out from behind the door and caught my arm. "I shall see to it," she whispered. "They shall sail on the St. Paul at eleven o'clock." Then she gripped me until her nails hurt through my sleeve. "Oh, Courtlandt," she said, "I have at last seen a man!" and she closed the big door behind me.

The solution of the matter arrived a month later. I was taking a hasty luncheon at a down-town cafe, when Freddie Harland of the firm of Milton, Harland & Gaynor, came in and seated himself in the chair beside me.

"Hello, Parks," he said. "Old Williams tells me you were present when he bought a gold brick the other night."

"You mean the Smith deed?" I said.

"Well, rather," he answered "Williams took it down to West Virginia to have it recorded, and discovered, to use his spectacular language, that it was not worth 'three hurrahs in hell'."

"What was wrong with it?" I said. "It did not convey the husband's curtesy, I know; but Williams knew that too. He did not care for that, he said; he could cut the timber off in a year and he was willing to take the chance of Mrs Smith living until then."

"That," replied Freddie Harland, "is a mere bagatelle in the trouble. It seems that the supreme court of West Virginia has decided that a deed made by a wife, in which the husband does not join, conveys no estate of any character whatever, is merely a worthless piece of paper The Export Spruce company has the land under a proper deed. Mrs. Beatrix Smith has vanished into the fog beyond Fire Island and the bob-cats have pre-empted old William's mills."

"Good," I said, 'good! Gilbert stole half that land, so the chicken is home to roost."

"We reminded him of that," replied Freddie Harland, "when he began to jump around in the office."

GOT HIM DOWN TO EARTH

One of the stories which Frank Jones used to tell on himself is repeated by Al Campbell, who knew the dead dramshop keeper very well,

"Jones was born in Wales," said Campbell, "but when a young man lived in Bucyrus, O They had a volunteer fire department there and Jones was made chief.

"The citizens took such an interest in us,' said Jones in telling the story, 'that they chipped in and bought us five laddies new suits Across the breast of each suit was the motto: "We live to save," and on mine, above the motto was the word "chief" in very large letters, reaching nearly the width of the motto.

"'One day,' Jones went on in his usual droll way, 'the hotel caught fire. Now when "the" hotel catches fire in a small town it means something. This hotel was three stories high and we believed it the largest in the known world—having seen none any larger.

"'When the fire bell rang all of us ran home to get our new suits on before attempting to fight such a fire. When we reassembled, one by one, that hotel was certainly going some In a third story window was a man who, so I heard later, traveled for a wholesale rubber house. He said something about how he would like to be saved, but we could not understand him

"'This fellow got real mad and going back into his room put on some kind of a rubber suit which he blew up. Then he leaped from that awful tall building, three stories high. He struck the ground and bounced back as high as the top of the hotel'

"'Was he saved?' generally asked the bystanders for whom the story was intended.

"'Finally,' said Jones, 'but I had to empty a six-shooter into that derned inflated suit before I eventually got him down to earth.'"—Kansas City Journal.

Yuan's Harsh Discipline.

Although China has become a republic, the views of the sanctity of human life that prevail in western countries are not yet established in that overcrowded land. This story of Yuan Shi Kai, the newly installed president, is declared by Everybody's Weekly to be characteristic of the immediate past of that statesman—and so presumably of the present.

Yuan began to create an army on the European model. His discipline was exceedingly severe There was only one form of punishment in the new army—death. On one occasion an English official, an old acquaintance, visited him, and Yuan held a special review in his honor.

The viceroy noticed that a soldier failed to salute the English guest He called for the man's officer.

"Have that soldier beheaded at once!" he curtly commanded.

The English guest, horrified, protested.

"It is absurd," he said, "to cut off a man's head because he omitted to salute me."

"Please do not interfere," said Yuan "I know the men I have to deal with. I know what I must do with them to get them into shape. You do not." The man's head came off.—Youth's Companion.

Unsinkable Ship.

Plans for an unsinkable trans-Atlantic ship have been made by Otto Kretschmer, dean of the engineering department of the Charlottenburg Technical high school. In them he embodies the principle of constructing a hull within a hull. The inner body, which is entirely independent of the outer, contains all the engines and boilers and is walled in with steel plating and with no doors to the outer structure.

A Carping Friend.

"A college offers me a degree for a million."

"Do you want to be a college youth?"

"No; but I'd like a degree."

"Oh, why spend all that money? Join the boy scouts."

Ode To Labor

By WILBUR D. NESBIT

Majestic force that shapes the world,
Betokened by the smoke-wreaths curled
Against the sky—
(Confound the luck!
That roaring, rattling motor truck
Makes so much noise I cannot think!
'Twould drive a stronger man to drink!
There, it has passed.)
—Against the sky
Like to a flag that floats on high
And leads a vast, unconquered host
To meet—
(Oh! I'll give up the ghost!
Who's making all that racket? Hey?
Some carpenters at work, you say.
Well, how can anybody write?
It sounds like bursting dynamite.)

Majestic force whose silent strength
Makes new the desert place at length,
And builds our walls—
(Great guns! That sound!
Why do those boilermakers pound?
It jars the ink right off my pen.
And how that foreman yells and bawls!
Well, here we go:)
—And builds our walls
And leads our highways fair and straight
From city gate to city gate.
It turns our dreamings into deeds;
The future's great demands it heeds
And by its might—
(What? Bless my soul!
They're dumping in the winter's coal.)

Majestic force at our command—
Force of the strong and brawny hand,
Of sinews tense and steel as steel,
Of shoulders wide—
(My senses reel
At this last wild and raucous blur
Of sound, a wild steam riveter!
There, it's shut off.)
—Of shoulders wide,
Of faith that labors eager-eyed,
Of sweating brow—
(Ker-smash! Bing! Bang!
Dodgast that loud track-laying gang!
Let's wind this up.)
—Of sweating brow—
Majestic force, that will not bow.
(What's that? Oh, why can't you keep still?
What? Can't I pay that plumber's bill?)

WILL STUDY LABOR PROBLEM.

A comprehensive investigation of the relations of capital and labor will be undertaken by the federal government. The investigation is to be conducted by a commission of nine persons to be appointed by the president, and with the advice and consent of the senate.

The commision is specifically ordered to investigate:

The general condition of labor in the principal industries, including agriculture, and especially in those carried on in corporate forms.

The existing relations between employers and employees.

The effect of the industrial conditions on public welfare and the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith.

The conditions of sanitation and safety of employees and the provisions for protecting their lives, limbs and health.

The growth of associations of employers and wage earners and the effect of such associations upon the relations between employers and employees.

The methods tried in any state or foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employers and employees.

The methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations.

The question of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions.

Queues and Hair Supply.

Consul General Anderson, stationed at Hongkong, has recently taken pains to correct the widespread impression that the growing tendency on the part of Chinamen to dispense with their queues will have the effect of making false hair cheap. It appears that the queues when cut are never sold, but are always preserved for burial with the owner. Mr. Anderson says that this is an absolute rule throughout South China, as well as in all other parts of the country from which he has been able to secure information on the subject.

Flirting With Fame.

"Why do you insist on nibbling around that hook?" said the wise fish. "You know the danger." "Yes," replied the little fellow; "but we all have a certain appetite for glory. I am willing to take a chance for the sake of being described to that man's friends as the big fish that got away."

A Flirt Like a Dipper.

A flirt is like a dipper attached to a hydrant; everyone is at liberty to drink from it, but no one desires to carry it away.—N. P. Willis.

LAWS NEED REVISION

Labor day' Its celebration, its parades and its meetings are important events in the industrial development of our country and the progressive movements of her people. It is the special occasion when wage earners review the history and struggles of the past, that like milestones, mark the onward march to higher conditions of life and labor. Particularly is it appropriate that in New England with all her hallowed memories and traditions, the movement for industrial uplift should find expression among the descendants of the men whose sacrifices and achievements contributed so much to the establishment of political independence and religious freedom on this continent.

While the problem of labor is one affecting all sections of our country and all the countries of the world, yet we may look to the east, to the men of New England, for a voice that, like that of the immortal Revere, shall warn us of our danger and point the way to safety.

There are at this time many aspects of the labor question that deserve and demand immediate consideration; not the least of these being the revision of our laws so as to make them compatible with the changes in our social and industrial life that have followed the momentous development of machinery and methods of production.

Wage earners must take the initiative in any movement calculated to promote their own interests or to protect them against the evils which have grown out of the combination and consolidation of capital; they must be both courageous and patient, aggressive yet prudent; they must build their organizations on sound foundations and conduct them on business lines, and it is highly important to the security of the wage-earners and the safety of society that women workers shall be organized, and thus protected against the demoralizing influences that have always attended overwork, excessive hours and under-nutrition.

The exhortation of Wendell Phillips cannot be too strongly emphasized: "Organize and stand together! Let the nation hear a united demand from the laboring voice"

John Mitchell

Protecting Children.

Forty-four states have adopted an age limit for the employment of children. The limit in some states is still pitifully low, but the organizations of labor that have wrested an age limit from unwilling legislatures will soon force the limit higher.

Forty-two states have set maximum hours for a working week for children.

Thirteen states have boiler inspection laws.

Thirty-seven states order seats provided for female employes.

Fourteen states officially inspect bakery shops.

Forty-eight states and the District of Columbia have laws conserving wages, making it possible to secure wages due, by "mechanics' liens," thus making wages preferred claims. These liens in some instances are attached to the property itself, in others to chattles or to designated funds.

Thirty-five states have established bureaus of labor statistics.

A Colossal Scheme.

The great highway of the commerce of the future will be the Pacific ocean. Mighty capitalists throughout the world are putting their heads together to erect the most colossal system for wireless telegraphy in the world. The system contemplates the linking together of all points along the western coast of America from Bering sea to the Straits of Magellan, and spanning the isles of the ocean, to link with this chain the whole easterly shore of Asia, running on down to the Straits Settlements. The contemplated system will cost in the aggregate many millions of dollars.

Share Your Good Times.

Share your good times if you can. It takes only a little while to read a story to a child, it takes only a little effort to draw the less popular girl into your own gay circle. You will be surprised to see what good fun even quite elderly people can be under the stimulation of "being wanted by the crowd."

Poor Mother Earth.

A bargain in a golf rig has decided one girl to go in for the ancient game at a resort famous for that sport.

RENOWNED POOL OF SIVA

Wonderful Waters Credited by People of India With All Sorts of Magnetic Attributes.

A remarkable Indian ceremony is the Kumbakonam Mahamakam festival. This feast takes place once a year, but the Hindu gods are supposed to visit the sacred tank on each twelfth anniversary. It is said that the god Brahma once requested Siva to collect the essence of all the waters in the world. It is understood that Siva succeeded in doing this, placing the fluid in a pot, which he hid away on the top of a mountain. During the flood this pot floated away from its position, and when the waters subsided it rested at a spot some distance away, now known as Kumbakonam. Siva, who happened to be hunting in the vicinity, saw the pot and, drawing his bow and arrow, shot at it with disastrous results. The water, rushing out, filled a hollow, and this at the present time is the renowned tank. This tank is now a place of pilgrimage, where, during the festival, untold thousands of the faithful dip themselves in the wonderful water, which is credited with all sorts of magical attributes.—Wide World Magazine.

Pitched Battle With Gypsies.

Some gypsies infesting the forests in the neighborhood of Fulda, Prussia, who have been hunted for weeks past, by the inhabitants and the military, have continued their nocturnal incursions into villages and lonely farms, where they lay their hands on anything they can take. A few days ago the population of Hunfeld, led by Baron Schenk, a local landowner, went in hot pursuit of the thieves, and, tracing them to the border of a forest, surprised them whilst feasting on the spoil of the farm yards. A pitched battle ensued between the two parties. One gypsy was wounded by a shot from Baron Schenk's revolver, but some of the band took him on their shoulders and ran into the forest, while the rest covered their flight with a steady fire. Then, turning, they fled in their turn and were lost in the forest. The whole countryside is now searching for them.

Fellow Feeling.

An advertising man of Cleveland was going home one night in a street car. It was late and the man who sat next to him began to talk.

"What business are you in?" he asked.

"The advertising business."

"Is that so? I used to be in the advertising business myself. Quit it, though, and went into the rag and old bottle business; got a horse and clean up my sixty every month."

There seemed to be nothing for the advertising man to say, so he said it.

"Yes," continued the talkative man, "I was in the advertising business—was a sandwich man for a clothing store for six months! Say," and he leaned over, confidentially, "ain't it hard work when the wind blows?"—Saturday Evening Post.

The Burgoyne-Hayes Dinner

By Melville Davisson Post

Copyright by Edward J. Clode

The dinner given by Mrs. Burgoyne-Hayes to Prince Edward of Hesse Mochel-Schweren will be always remembered by New York. The proud old dowager cut society like a butcher. The list was a streak of blood. No massacre of King Phillip's war ever left more savagery skulking in the bushes. The terrible old woman openly declared that she intended to give New York the bayonet, as her great relative did in 1777.

I shall always remember this dinner for another reason. It was the first appearance in America of Beatrix Waldo after her marriage with Capt. Gordon Smith of his majesty's lines in South Africa. There were a lot of floating, disconnected rumors about this marriage. Beatrix certainly posed as an heiress before the Englishman went under the yoke, and we got the impression, doubtless directly, that he had a large estate somewhere on Loch Codan, £5,000, at any rate, over his pay. Then we heard later on, through Jimmie Dale, I think—he always knew the foreign gossip—that the Englishman did not have a brass farthing over his pay, and was rather worse off than that by a fat budget of debts. We knew that Beatrix had no income to speak of—her aunt kept the gown-makers going for her. There were wild lands, back inland somewhere, that Beatrix used to turn into oil, coal and spruce lumber when she got to dreaming, but the over-drained old aunt used to pay taxes on them, and I think that was about the only reminder of the fortune that ever came along to New York.

I had Sarah Lamarr on my right at this dinner, and, fortunately, an impossible German person on her right, who kept his nose well in his wines and pates. I wanted to ask Sarah Lemarr about Beatrix, and was glad of the Teuton's exclusive interest in his stomach. I shared a rather general curiosity. The Englishman was here with Beatrix, putting in his leave of absence. If they mooned for vanished Eldorados, one saw no tear-stains in it. I thought the pair of them at the far end of the table looked happy enough, pretty comfortable for disillusioned fortune hunters. Presently I got Sarah Lemarr to myself, and was about to inquire into the mystery when she took the very subject from the tip of my tongue.

"I have been hoping for a word with you, Courtlandt," she said; "it's about Beatrix Smith. She needs your assistance."

"I am not a divorce lawyer," I said.

"Nonsense, Courtlandt," she answered; "they love each other. They are lovers. Can you gather the significance of such an undreamed of ending to the effort each of them made to marry a fortune?"

"Then," I said, "Beatrix cannot need assistance. Poets tell us that lovers do not dwell in this land of trolley cars and spindles, but somewhere on blessed islands they are happy."

"But, my dear boy," said Sarah Lemarr, "one might take a stone bruise or a thorn in the thumb even on a blessed island."

"Not so," I answered; "the Well at the World's End is there, and whosoever tasteth thereof shall be perfect as his dreams are perfect, and around and all about this land Lethe, the River of Oblivion, rolls its watery labyrinth. Nay, do not interrupt me; the human heart longs with a longing that cannot be uttered for this enchanted country where, you tell me, Beatrix walks with her Englishman."

"Well!" said Sarah Lemarr. "Who is the girl, Courtlandt?"

"There you go," I said, "demonstrating the greatest unwritten truth about a woman; namely, that every reflection arises from a personal experience. If one deplores sin, he has robbed his employer in his youth; if one apostrophizes love, he is about to marry Miss Jones of Forty-eighth street. The girl in my case, dear Madame von Hubert, is that mysterious fairy-woman, daughter of Abu Jaffar, surnamed the Victorious, second Caliph of Bagdad under the dynasty of the Abbasides, asleep on her silk carpet in Arabia."

Here the impossible German person interrupted to inquire if I thought the truffles were canned. I did not think they were canned, and he was content; but the moment gave Sarah Lemarr a lead and she seized it with the practical directness of a New Bedford skipper.

"Now, Courtlandt," she said, "be sensible. Beatrix needs $40,000."

"How original of Beatrix," I replied. "Most of us need only a couple of hundred."

"If you are going to be nasty about it, Courtlandt," she said, "I will never speak to you again. You must help Beatrix to find this $40,000. The poor girl is dreadfully worried about it. You see, Courtlandt, when the two of them awoke after the honeymoon to find their estate all Castilian haze, instead of a conventional separation they fell in love with each other like a couple of Breton peasants. Beatrix told me all about it; she is lovely. She does not want the money for herself; she wants it to pay Lieut. Gordon Smith's debts. When his debts are paid, he will be made a captain and transferred to his old regiment in India. Beatrix adores India; she is quite content to go out there and live quietly on a captain's pay, and love her big Englishman and be happy. But she wants his debts cleared off; 'his honor untarnished,' she calls it. It seems to mean a lot to her, and she is so absurdly in love with the tall soldier that it is enough to break a body's heart. Now, Courtlandt, where are we to get this money for her?"

"Unfortunately," I replied, "I do not at this moment think of a convenient orphan to rob. How would it do to ride the poor box at St. Thomas'?"

Sarah Lemarr ignored my second offense after the manner of a woman, and, likewise, true to the same manner, gave the remainder of the story after having asked a decision in the midst of it.

"You remember Beatrix owned several thousand acres of forest land back somewhere in the Alleghanies, in some county of the Virginias. Let—me—see, she said the name had been a fortunate one for the first Captain Smith in America, and ought not to fail the second one."

"Pocahontas," I suggested.

"How stupid!" she said. "Of course, Pocahontas. Well, some lumber company has managed to steal half of Beatrix's land, and it, and some other rival companies, now want to buy the remainder of her. They will give $20,000. They have been dogging her footsteps ever since she landed in New York. But this is only $20,000, and Beatrix needs $40,000. If she could get back the land which has been stolen, it would bring the other $20,000. I don't know how they managed to get it. Beatrix has the whole story in detail, with maps and so forth. I think she failed to pay the taxes at some time, and they stole it that way. Now, Courtlandt, you must induce Mr. Mason to get Beatrix's land for her. She is stopping with me, you know. Bring him to my house tomorrow for dinner. Lieut. Gordon Smith is going to Washington tomorrow to call on the British legation and will not return until very late; but he knows nothing about it. Beatrix is the business agent for the pair of them."

I smiled at the artlessness of Mme. von Hubert. "Certainly," I said; "but why not bring the man in the moon, too, and the Witch of Endor. Randolph Mason is hardly the sort of person that goes out to dinner."

"Well, then," said Sarah Lemarr, "bring him after dinner. I will write him a little note."

I could have laughed in the girl's face. "What will you say in your little note?" I inquired.

"Oh, well, what any one would say," she answered, "that I wish to see him on an important business matter."

"And do you know," I said, "what would happen to your little note?"

"What would happen to it?" she said. Her chin went up. She was a social overlord, this Mme. von Hubert. Her invitations were commands. The social aspirant dreamed of their coming, as of that of Abou ben Adhem's Angel.

"This would happen," I answered. "Randolph Mason would rip open the envelope with his long finger, fold back the paper where you creased it across the middle, and drop it into the waste basket."

A red flush sprang up along her dog collar of diamonds. I hurried to explain. "I beg your pardon," I said; "but you must think of Randolph Mason as you would of an eccentric scientist—Darwin or Agassiz—an intellectual recluse without emotions, a sort of Hindoo ascetic of a high order. You could not write any of these such a note; neither could you write such a not to him. Now, there is a sort of note which you might write to any of those, and you might try such a note on him, although I have little hope of it."

Mme. von Hubert's head was still in the air. "You mean," she said, "such a note ought to run: 'Will the ogre kindly meet a kissable fairy on the north side of the hawthorn thicket at moonrise?' I believe your scientist, no matter how old, usually comes out of his shell for this sort of thing." But she could not keep her exquisite good nature under a bushel for long. She began to laugh. "Really, Courtlandt, to be serious, what ought I to write him? We must have his help for Beatrix."

"The sort of note," I said, "that you would write to a famous archaeologist, if you wished him to call and examine a rare Egyptian pot, or to a numismatist if you possessed a coin of the time of Cyrus, or to a bacteriologist if you had a culture of the bubonic plague for him. Invite him to the examination of a case of rare and interesting injustice, at your residence on Eighty-sixth street at nine o'clock tomorrow night."

I was going on to explain about this note a little in detail, but the impossible German suddenly realized that he ought to talk, and at once set about it with the persistance and regularity of a man filing a saw. We resisted as long as we could, and then gave it up for another Sedan. We were rescued finally by Mme. Castaigne, who gave some fragments from Moliere. I tried to get a further word with Beatrix Smith, but Mrs. Burgoyne-Hayes descended on me.

"I must present you to the prince, Courtlandt," she said. "Your great-grandfather on your mother's side, I think, was a soldier of our King George."

"Yes, madam," I said, "but the grand duke of Hesse-Darmstadt drew his pay."

I did not see the note which Mme. von Hubert wrote to Randolph Mason; but it was effective. He requested me to return after dinner and accompany him to Eighty-sixth street. The von Huberts have a residence on Eighty-sixth street. We arrived there on the hour and were shown into the library. Randolph Mason at once sat down in a heavy black oak chair before the fire. This chair was a massive and curious piece. It was carved by the peasants of the Black Forest for the baron's grandfather. The tortuous shapes forming its arms and legs are like the gargoyles to be seen under the roofs of castles on the Rhine, and now and then in Paris.

I was impressed by the picture of Mason in this massive chair. His long, sinewy fingers gripping the writhing features of the hideous oaken monsters, his face thrown partly into shadow by the flaming logs on the hearth. The masterful iron face, the lean, hard jaw with its projecting chin, the fearless, bony nose appearing in the fantastic light flattened a little at the end, like that of a beast of prey, and the craggy forehead—all colored, browned, reddened by the fire.

I heard the latch of the door click, and looked up to see Beatrix Smith standing on the threshold, looking at Mason with profound interest. Her lips were parted and her eyes wide. She had not thought to come on this curious picture of the middle ages taken down from some Italian gallery and propped up here in the library of the von Huberts. She bowed to me, crossed the room and sat down by the library table a little beyond Randolph Mason, at the corner of the fire.

Presently Mason looked up at her. "Is this Mme. von Hubert?" he said, without rising, without an inflection of interest or courtesy, as he would have said: "Is this the contract?" "The bond in question?"

She flushed a little. "No," she answered; "I am merely the interesting case that you came to examine into."

"Give me the details of it," said Mason.

She began at once without introduction or verbiage and told her story with a brevity and directness that I could not associate with that rather silly Beatrix Waldo who used to go up and down through the drawing-rooms of Newport looking for a rich husband.

She had inherited from her father two thousand acres of wild forest land in the county of Pocahontas in the state of West Virginia. She and her aunt had watched it carefully and paid the taxes on it each year; they had even taken the little local newspaper, published at the county seat, in order that they might know what lands were returned delinquent for taxes and sold. They had been warned against the horde of dangerous and unscrupulous land thieves said to infest the mountain districts of the Virginias. But her great care was not sufficient against the ingenuity of these pirates. After one of the periodic assessments of real estate, one thousand acres of her estate were listed on the land books under the name of Walden, returned delinquent, and sold for taxes. The land was purchased by Gilbert Williams, president of the Black Creek Lumber company, for $86.85. She had paid no attention to the sale, not recognizing her land under this name until she came to have the estate surveyed a few months ago, some five or six years after its purchase at the tax sale by Gilbert Williams. She also learned that the whole thing was a well planned and effective scheme of this owner of the Black Creek Lumber company to steal her land. These wild lands had vastly increased in value.

This company and a rival one, the Export Spruce company, were exceedingly anxious to purchase the remaining tract. They would give, she thought, twenty dollars an acre for it. The agents of the two companies had been at her heels ever since she arrived in New York. Gilbert Williams was now at the Fifth Avenue hotel. He had endeavored to reach her by telephone this very evening. He offered a little better price than the Export Spruce company, but he could well afford to, since he it was that had stolen half the land. The agent of the Export Spruce company was at the Holland. His note, on the table, requested an interview with her at any hour she would name, day or night. This indicated how very desirous they were for the land. Such a sale would yield her twenty thousand dollars. All the lands would have given her the forty thousand which she needed. Her name now was Beatrix Smith; she had married Lieutenant Gordon Smith the year before. He was in Washington today, but would return before eleven o'clock this night.

That was the whole history, brief, accurate and devoid of superfluous comment. She had there on the table the original deed, maps and tax receipts.

Mason's face showed marked annoyance, as that of an eminent surgeon would, who, having been sent for in hot haste, arrives to find the patient with a bumped nose.

"Why do you send for me?" he said; "any lawyer could adjust this problem."

"It is vital to me," replied the woman; "it means my happiness and my husband's career. I beg you to help me."

Her eyes began to fill up and her lips trembled with distress.

Randolph Mason gave no attention to the woman's emotions. He sat, beating the tips of his fingers on the arms of the chair, with evident annoyance.

"Let us get the thing over, then," he said. "Call up this man Gilbert Williams. Say to him that Mrs. Smith has determined to sell the lands; ask him to come here at once with a notary."

"What!" cried Beatrix Smith, "sell the land to Williams? the man who robbed me! How can that help?"

"Madam," said Randolph Mason, "do not worry me with petty bickering."

I signaled Beatrix Smith to a conference with me in the hall. "Do exactly as he says," I whispered when we were outside the door, "and hurry."

She promised and went swiftly upstairs to the telephone.

In a very few minutes Gilbert Williams arrived. He was a red-haired old fellow with a face like a fox, and beady eyes set obliquely in his head.

Alfred Morris

Randolph Mason arose when he came in, and explained that as Mrs. Smith wished to leave America at once, she had determined to sell her lands, provided cash was paid. The lands were worth thirty thousand dollars, but her husband was absent and could not convey his curtesy in the deed. She would therefore take twenty thousand cash and make a deed on the spot. Gilbert Williams snapped up the offer. He did not care anything about the curtesy of the husband. The land itself was worth nothing, the timber only was valuable. His mills would cut it off in a year, and he was willing to take the chance of Mrs. Smith's living that long. He produced a deed, which he had brought with him to New York, and ran a pen through the blank which it contained for the husband's name. Beatrix signed the deed, and the notary who accompanied Williams filled in the acknowledgment and affixed his seal in proper form.

Gilbert Williams wrote out a check on the Importers' Bank of Commerce for twenty thousand dollars. We ascertained by telephone to the cashier at his residence that the check was good. Williams then folded his deed, put it in his pocket and departed with the notary. The whole matter had taken less than twenty minutes to bring to a close.

Randolph Mason inquired at what hour Lieutenant Gordon Smith would arrive, and was told that he would be at the house at half-past ten. "Direct the agent of the Export Spruce company to be here at that hour," he said. Then he sat down in the oak chair before the fire.

We were all greatly puzzled. We did not see why this second purchaser should be invited to come. Beatrix Smith had nothing more to sell. The transaction seemed to us to have arrived at its final act; the curtain down and the lights out.

Sarah Lemarr came down to the Holland tracks if that man told me to do it. He is adorable. I could follow him around like a dog and bite people if he whistled to me. Not another word out of you, or I will come down with the dog-whip." And she shook her little clenched hand over the banisters.

Finally we got the matter over. Beatrix and her husband executed the deed. "I got a notary from the Plaza. The agent gave certified drafts on Dexter & Company for the twenty thousand dollars, and, like Gilbert Williams, folded his deed and departed.

Beatrix Smith bearded the lion with eyes swimming in tears. "Mr. Mason," she said, "you have made a terrible mistake. The Export Spruce company is not the one who stole my land. I cannot take its money; it will not get the property." And she went on with a torrent of lamentation.

"Madam," said Mason, rising, "all this is drivel. I have made no mistake. The Export Spruce company will get every acre that it has this night purchased." Then he directed Beatrix to cash the checks at the earliest hour in the morning and sail at once for England.

When we went down the steps to his carriage, Sarah Lemarr slipped out from behind the door and caught my arm. "I shall see to it," she whispered. "They shall sail on the St. Paul at eleven o'clock." Then she gripped me until her nails hurt through my sleeve. "Oh, Courtlandt," she said, "I have at last seen a man!" and she closed the big door behind me.

The solution of the matter arrived a month later. I was taking a hasty luncheon at a down-town cafe, when Freddie Harland of the firm of Milton, Harland & Gaynor, came in and seated himself in the chair beside me.

"Hello, Parks," he said. "Old Williams tells me you were present when he bought a gold brick the other night."

"You mean the Smith deed?" I said.

"Well, rather," he answered. "Williams took it down to West Virginia to have it recorded, and discovered, to use his spectacular language, that it was not worth 'three hurrahs in hell'."

"What was wrong with it?" I said. "It did not convey the husband's curtesy, I know; but Williams knew that too. He did not care for that, he said; he could cut the timber off in a year and he was willing to take the chance of Mrs. Smith living until then."

"That," replied Freddie Harland, "is a mere bagatelle in the trouble. It seems that the supreme court of West Virginia has decided that a deed made by a wife, in which the husband does not join, conveys no estate of any character whatever, is merely a worthless piece of paper. The Export Spruce company has the land under a proper deed. Mrs. Beatrix Smith has vanished into the fog beyond Fire Island and the bob-cats have pre-empted old William's mills."

"Good," I said, "good! Gilbert stole half that land, so the chicken is home to roost."

"We reminded him of that," replied Freddie Harland, "when he began to jump around in the office."

For the legal principle involved in this story see Austin et al. v. Brown et al., 37 W. Va., 634. Syllabus, Austin et al. v. Brown et al., supra. "M. A. B., a married woman, not living separate and apart, but with her husband, undertook by deed . . . to sell and convey a certain tract of land, part of her real estate . . . Held, said pretended deed was wholly ineffectual to divest M. A. B., the grantor, of her ownership of such land, and did not pass any interest therein, legal or equitable, to the said grantees."

GOT HIM DOWN TO EARTH

One of the stories which Frank Jones used to tell on himself is repeated by Al Campbell, who knew the dead dramshop keeper very well.

"Joges was born in Wales," said Campbell, "but when a young man lived in Bucyrus, O. They had a volunteer fire department there and Jones was made chief.

"'The citizens took such an interest in us,' said Jones in telling the story, 'that they chipped in and bought us fire laddies new suits. Across the breast of each suit was the motto: "We live to save," and on mine, above the motto was the word "chief" in very large letters, reaching nearly the width of the motto.

"'One day,' Jones went on in his usual droll way, 'the hotel caught fire. Now when "the" hotel catches fire in a small town it means something. This hotel was three stories high and we believed it the largest in the known world—having seen none any larger.

"'When the fire bell rang all of us ran home to get our new suits on before attempting to fight such a fire. When we reassembled, one by one, that hotel was certainly going some. In a third story window was a man who, so I heard later, traveled for a wholesale rubber house. He said something about how he would like to be saved, but we could not understand him.

"'This fellow got real mad and going back into his room put on some kind of a rubber suit which he blew up. Then he leaped from that awful tall building, three stories high. He struck the ground and bounced back as high as the top of the hotel.'

"'Was he saved?' generally asked the bystanders for whom the story was intended.

"'Finally,' said Jones, 'but I had to empty a six-shooter into that derned inflated suit before I eventually got him down to earth.'"—Kansas City Journal.

Yuan's Harsh Discipline.

Although China has become a republic, the views of the sanctity of human life that prevail in western countries are not yet established in that overcrowded land. This story of Yuan Shi Kai, the newly installed president, is declared by Everybody's Weekly to be characteristic of the immediate past of that statesman—and so presumably of the present.

Yuan began to create an army on the European model. His discipline was exceedingly severe. There was only one form of punishment in the new army—death. On one occasion an English official, an old acquaintance, visited him, and Yuan held a special review in his honor.

The viceroy noticed that a soldier failed to salute the English guest. He called for the man's officer.

"Have that soldier beheaded at once!" he curtly commanded.

The English guest, horrified, protested.

"It is absurd," he said, "to cut off a man's head because he omitted to salute me."

"Please do not interfere," said Yuan. "I know the men I have to deal with. I know what I must do with them to get them into shape. You do not." The man's head came off.—Youth's Companion.

Unsinkable Ship.

Plans for an unsinkable trans-Atlantic ship have been made by Otto Kretschmer, dean of the engineering department of the Charlottenburg Technical high school. In them he embodies the principle of constructing a hull within a hull. The inner body, which is entirely independent of the outer, contains all the engines and boilers and is walled in with steel plating and with no doors to the outer structure.

A Carping Friend.

"A college offers me a degree for a million."

"Do you want to be a college youth?"

"No; but I'd like a degree."

Ode To Labor

By WILBUR D. NESBIT

Majestic force that shapes the world,
Betokened by the smoke-wreaths curled
Against the sky—
(Confound the luck!
That roaring, rattling motor truck
Makes so much noise I cannot think!
'Twould drive a stronger man to drink!
There, it has passed.)
—Against the sky
Like to a flag that floats on high
And leads a vast, unconquered host
To meet—
(Oh! I'll give up the ghost!
Who's making all that racket? Hey?
Some carpenters at work, you say.
Well, how can anybody write?
It sounds like bursting dynamite.)

Majestic force whose silent strength
Makes new the desert place at length,
And builds our walls—
(Great guns! That sound!
Why do those boilermakers pound?
It jars the ink right off my pen.
And how that foreman yells and bawls!
Well, here we go:)
—And builds our walls
And leads our highways fair and straight
From city gate to city gate.
It turns our dreamings into deeds;
The future's great demands it heeds
And by its might—
(What? Bless my soul!
They're dumping in the winter's coal.)

Majestic force at our command—
Force of the strong and brawny hand,
Of sinews tense and steel as steel,
Of shoulders wide—
(My senses reel
At this last wild and raucous blur
Of sound, a wild steam riveter!
There, it's shut off.)
—Of shoulders wide,
Of faith that labors eager-eyed,
Of sweating brow—
(Ker-smash! Bing! Bang!
Dodgast that hud track-laying gang!
Let's wind this up.)
—Of sweating brow—
Majestic force, that will not bow.
(What's that? Oh, why can't you keep still?

WILL STUDY LABOR PROBLEM.

A comprehensive investigation of the relations of capital and labor will be undertaken by the federal government. The investigation is to be conducted by a commission of nine persons to be appointed by the president, and with the advice and consent of the senate.

The commision is specifically ordered to investigate:

The general condition of labor in the principal industries, including agriculture, and especially in those carried on in corporate forms.

The existing relations between employers and employees.

The effect of the industrial conditions on public welfare and the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith.

The conditions of sanitation and safety of employees and the provisions for protecting their lives, limbs and health.

The growth of associations of employers and wage earners and the effect of such associations upon the relations between employers and employees.

The methods tried in any state or foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employers and employees.

The methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations.

The qfinestion of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions.

Queues and Hair Supply.

Consul General Anderson, stationed at Hongkong, has recently taken pains to correct the widespread impression that the growing tendency on the part of Chinamen to dispense with their queues will have the effect of making false hair cheap. It appears that the queues when cut are never sold, but are always preserved for burial with the owner. Mr. Anderson says that this is an absolute rule throughout South China, as well as in all other parts of the country from which he has been able to secure information on the subject.

Flirting With Fame.

"Why do you insist on nibbling around that hook?" said the wise fish. "You know the danger." "Yes," replied the little fellow; "but we all have a certain appetite for glory. I am willing to take a chance for the sake of being described to that man's friends as the big fish that got away."

A Flirt Like a Dipper.

LAWS NEED REVISION

Labor day! Its celebration, its parades and its meetings are important events in the industrial development of our country and the progressive movements of her people. It is the special occasion when wage-earners review the history and struggles of the past, that, like milestones, mark the onward march to higher conditions of life and labor. Particularly is it appropriate that in New England with all her hallowed memories and traditions, the movement for industrial uplift should find expression among the descendants of the men whose sacrifices and achievements contributed so much to the establishment of political independence and religious freedom on this continent.

While the problem of labor is one affecting all sections of our country and all the countries of the world, yet we may look to the east, to the men of New England, for a voice that, like that of the immortal Revere, shall warn us of our danger and point the way to safety.

There are at this time many aspects of the labor question that deserve and demand immediate consideration; not the least of these being the revision of our laws so as to make them compatible with the changes in our social and industrial life that have followed the momentous development of machinery and methods of production.

Wage earners must take the initiative in any movement calculated to promote their own interests or to protect them against the evils which have grown out of the combination and consolidation of capital; they must be both courageous and patient, aggressive yet prudent; they must build their organizations on sound foundations and conduct them on business lines, and it is highly important to the security of the wage-earners and the safety of society that women workers shall be organized, and thus protected against the demoralizing influences that have always attended overwork, excessive hours and under-nutrition.

John Mitchell

Protecting Children.

Forty-four states have adopted an age limit for the employment of children. The limit in some states is still pitifully low, but the organizations of labor that have wrested an age limit from unwilling legislatures will soon force the limit higher.

Forty-two states have set maximum hours for a working week for children.

Thirteen states have boiler inspection laws.

Thirty-seven states order seats provided for female employes.

Fourteen states officially inspect bakery shops.

Forty-eight states and the District of Columbia have laws conserving wages, making it possible to secure wages due, by "mechanics' liens," thus making wages preferred claims. These liens in some instances are attached to the property itself, in others to chattles or to designated funds.

Thirty-five states have established bureaus of labor statistics.

A Colossal Scheme.

The great highway of the commerce of the future will be the Pacific ocean. Mighty capitalists throughout the world are putting their heads together to erect the most colossal system for wireless telegraphy in the world. The system contemplates the linking together of all points along the western coast of America from Bering sea to the Straits of Magellan, and spanning the isles of the ocean, to link with this chain the whole easterly shore of Asia, running on down to the Straits Settlements. The contemplated system will cost in the aggregate many millions of dollars.

Share Your Good Times.

Share your good times if you can. It takes only a little while to read a story to a child, it takes only a little effort to draw the less popular girl into your own gay circle. You will be surprised to see what good fun even quite elderly people can be under the stimulation of "being wanted by the crowd."

Poor Mother Earth.

A bargain in a golf rig has decided one girl to go in for the ancient game at a resort famous for that sport.

RENOWNED POOL OF SIVA

A remarkable Indian ceremony is the Kumbakonam Mahamakam festival. This feast takes place once a year, but the Hindu gods are supposed to visit the sacred tank on each twelfth anniversary. It is said that the god Brahma once requested Siva to collect the essence of all the waters in the world. It is understood that Siva succeeded in doing this, placing the fluid in a pot, which he hid away on the top of a mountain. During the flood this pot floated away from its position, and when the waters subsided it rested at a spot some distance away, now known as Kumbakonam. Siva, who happened to be hunting in the vicinity, saw the pot and, drawing his bow and arrow, shot at it with disastrous results. The water, rushing out, filled a hollow, and this at the present time is the renowned tank. This tank is now a place of pilgrimage, where, during the festival, untold thousands of the faithful dip themselves in the wonderful water, which is credited with all sorts of magical attributes.—Wide World Magazine.

Pitched Battle With Gypsies.

Some gypsies infesting the forests in the neighborhood of Fulda, Prussia, who have been hunted for weeks past by the inhabitants and the military, have continued their nocturnal incursions into villages and lonely farms, where they lay their hands on anything they can take. A few days ago the population of Hunfeld, led by Baron Schenk, a local landowner, went in hot pursuit of the thieves, and, tracing them to the border of a forest, surprised them whilst feasting on the spoil of the farm yards. A pitched battle ensued between the two parties. One gypsy was wounded by a shot from Baron Schenk's revolver, but some of the band took him on their shoulders and ran into the forest, while the rest covered their flight with a steady fire. Then, turning, they fled in their turn and were lost in the forest. The whole countryside is now searching for them.

Fellow Feeling.

An advertising man of Cleveland was going home one night in a street car. It was late and the man who sat next to him began to talk.

"What business are you in?" he asked.

"The advertising business."

"Is that so? I used to be in the advertising business myself. Quit it, though, and went into the rag and old bottle business; got a horse and clean up my sixty every month."

There seemed to be nothing for the advertising man to say, so he said it.

"Yes," continued the talkative man, "I was in the advertising business—was a sandwich man for a clothing store for six months! Say," and he leaned over, confidentially, "ain't it hard work when the wind blows?"—Saturday Evening Post.

Labor Day Proclamation.

In accordance with a custom of many years standing Labor Day in the United States will be celebrated and Governor McGovern has joined with other governors in naming Monday, Sept. 2, as Labor Day and recommending that all people in the state show their appreciation of the significance of the occasion by attending and participating in public exercises in honor of the day. He says:

"Land, capital and labor are the chief factors in the production of wealth, whereby all human wants are supplied; and the greatest of all these is labor. 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread,' was the stern command imposed in the beginning; and it still obtains. Like the soil, the air and the sunshine, labor is indispensable to the maintenance of life. Labor's part in production, labor's claims in distribution and labor's interest in consumption are therefore vital problems in every society that seeks industrial prosperity, social justice or moral improvement.

"Especially is this true now in Wisconsin, where the cause of workingmen and workingwomen has received and is still receiving so much thoughtful and sympathetic consideration. It is therefore appropriate in every way that the day set apart by law in recognition of the dignity of labor should be fitly celebrated by us this year."

What are the duties of parents toward their children? Much has been said of late, many heaping blame upon parents and teachers because of some trouble or of some immoral conduct of their children. It may be wise to ponder and determine partially at least when a parent has fulfilled his duty toward his child. Arent there often children who seem to go wrong after every duty of a mother or father has been carried out toward the child? Have'nt you known mothers with breaking hearts whose every duty and every care had been carried out toward the child and yet the child will choose the evil instead of the good. We are only going to say these few words in solice to such good mothers.

From the day the child is born, this good mother is and will continue to be self sacrificing. She uses her hands to support and feed it, her heart to love it, and her intelligence to guide it. She does not consider the child as a moral creature already formed but to be formed. She gives her energy and life to gain these ends. As a child is weak she watches his physical wants and keeps him from ignorance. She is the guiding hand in moral acts as is the moral law or conscience the guide to right conduct in the full grown. She demands obedience firmly and kindly because the child cannot judge for itself. She always judges the limits of the obedience and never allows the child to determine in what he should obey and what he should not obey because if the child chooses he never knows obedience. As the child grows older the good mother makes her child use his own strength to help himself and others she makes him use his mental faculties more and more and she has him judge of right and wrong conduct oftener and oftener. The time soon comes however that youth wishes to become independent, when youth becomes a man and belongs to himself. Is the mothers duties toward her child accomplished? She has done what is in her power to do yet often the little bend in a sapling never grows straight even with the tenderest care and watching. No one is to blame.

Yet mothers the time has come where your power is gone. The only influence you extend now is through your love and advice. Never let the time come when the child cannot find love in your heart for him no matter what happens. When he earnestly seeks your advice give it freely. The love and advice of a parent is a still voice that speaks in all hours of the night and day for good, and often turn an evil motive unto a good act. Don't think you can do more than this. Do this and your work is well done.

Bedouins Using Olive Oil.

It is reported that a market for oil is developing among the Bedouin tribes, who have been accustomed to use samn (cooking butter made of sheep's and goats' milk)), but who, on account of the high prices obtainable for samn, are selling it and substituting olive oil.

Father Farmer, Why Does Your Boy Beat You Into Town?

Every once in a while, and sometimes oftener than that, I find some farmer wondering why the boy wants to leave the farm. Why wonder? Especially when you know that the boy knows that you really want to do the same thing as soon as you have saved up enough money to do it in the way that you want to do. Is it not a fact that too many of you, by your daily lives and examples, are teaching him that the farm is only a place on which to work hard, and to live harder? And for what? To make enough money to move into town after you are too old to enjoy things, and when your spending mucles have been paralyzed by years of inaction and disuse. If your daily lives are along those lines, do not be surprised if your boy beats you into town by several years. And it may be that it will require years of tramping over the crippling pavements of the city before he realizes that after all the plowed ground was easiest on his corns and conscience—and far better for his comfort. It is up to you to keep the boy on the farm. How? By teaching him, both by precept and example, that the farm is not merely a place to work and win wealth, by the sacrifice of many pleasures But to teach him that the farm is the best place God ever invented on which to live, broad, free, efficient, serviceable, helpful, healthy, human lives. Thousands and thousands of such lives are being lived today upon the farm, out in the open of God's sunshine. And it is because of this fact, in a large degree, that this county is great and good—and growing better.

Sterling, Ill., Aug. 11.—Fourteen young Hereford cows today had their first experience with whiskey at the farm of John David, their owner. For eight of them it was also their last experience. They are dead. Six others are sobering up and philosophizing.

Heavy rains had soaked through the silo in which fodder had been stored for the cattle. It was hot. The corn fermented and crude whiskey poured in little puddles about the bottom of the silo.

The cows partook. Then they zigzagged towards the creek and stumbled in. The six remorseful ones were hauled out; the others were drowned.

Labor Day Proclamation.

In accordance with a custom of many years standing Labor Day in the United States will be celebrated and Governor McGovern has joined with other governors in naming Monday, Sept. 2, as Labor Day and recommending that all people in the state show their appreciation of the significance of the occasion by attending and participating in public exercises in honor of the day. He says:

"Land, capital and labor are the chief factors in the production of wealth, whereby all human wants are supplied; and the greatest of all those is labor. 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread,' was the stern command imposed in the beginning; and it still obtains. Like the soil, the air and the sunshine, labor is indispensable to the maintenance of life. Labor's part in production, labor's claims in distribution and labor's interest in consumption are therefore vital problems in every society that seeks industrial prosperity, social justice or moral improvement.

"Especially is this true now in Wisconsin, where the cause of workingmen and workingwomen has received and is still receiving so much thoughtful and sympathetic consideration. It is therefore appropriate in every way that the day set apart by law in recognition of the dignity of labor should be fitly celebrated by us this year."

What are the duties of parents toward their children? Much has been said of late, many heaping blame upon parents and teachers because of some trouble or of some immoral conduct of their children. It may be wise to ponder and determine partially at least when a parent has fulfilled his duty toward his child. Arent there often children who seem to go wrong after every duty of a mother or father has been carried out toward the child? Have'nt you known mothers with breaking hearts whose every duty and every care had been carried out toward the child and yet the child will choose the evil instead of the good. We are only going to say these few words in solice to such good mothers.

From the day the child is born, this good mother is and will continue to be self sacrificing. She uses her hands to support and feed it, her heart to love it, and her intelligence to guide it. She does not consider the child as a moral creature already formed but to be formed. She gives her energy and life to gain these ends. As a child is weak she watches his physical wants and keeps him from ignorance. She is the guiding hand in moral acts as is the moral law or conscience the guide to right conduct in the full grown. She demands obedience firmly and kindly because the child cannot judge for itself. She always judges the limits of the obedience and never allows the child to determine in what he should obey and what he should not obey because if the child chooses he never knows obedience. As the child grows older the good mother makes her child use his own strength to help himself and others she makes him use his mental faculties more and more and she has him judge of right and wrong conduct oftener and oftener. The time soon comes however that youth wishes to become independent, when youth becomes a man and belongs to himself. Is the mothers duties toward her child accomplished? She has done what is in her power to do yet often the little bend in a sapling never grows straight even with the tenderest care and watching. No one is to blame.

Yet mothers the time has come where your power is gone. The only influence you extend now is through your love and advice. Never let the time come when the child cannot find love in your heart for him no matter what happens. When he earnestly seeks your advice give it freely. The love and advice of a parent is a still voice that speaks in all hours of the night and day for good, and often turn an evil motive unto a good act. Don't think you can do more than this. Do this and your work is well done.

Father Farmer, Why Does Your Boy Beat You Into Town?

Every once in awhile, and sometimes oftener than that, I find some farmer wondering why the boy wants to leave the farm. Why wonder? Especially when you know that the boy knows that you really want to do the same thing as soon as you have saved up enough money to do it in the way that you want to do. Is it not a fact that too many of you, by your daily lives and examples, are teaching him that the farm is only a place on which to work hard, and to live harder? And for what? To make enough money to move into town after you are too old to enjoy things, and when your spending muscles have been paralyzed by years of inaction and disuse. If your daily lives are along those lines, do not be surprised if your boy beats you into town by several years. And it may be that it will require years of tramping over the crippling pavements of the city before he realizes that after all the plowed ground was easiest on his corns and conscience—and far better for his comfort. It is up to you to keep the boy on the farm. How? By teaching him, both by precept and example, that the farm is not merely a place to work and win wealth, by the sacrifice of many pleasures. But to teach him that the farm is the best place God ever invented on which to live, broad, free, efficient, serviceable, helpful, healthy, human lives. Thousands and thousands of such lives are being lived today upon the farm, out in the open of God's sunshine. And it is because of this fact, in a large degree, that this county is great and good—and growing better.

A baby girl came to gladden the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Bymer on Wednesday August 14th. Congratulations.

Nellie Conway of Grand Rapids spent a few days at the White house the past week.

Florence and Orin Edwards returned Saturday from a week's visit at the Harry Turner home at Pittsville. They were accompanied home by their cousin Amy Turner who will spend some time here with relatives.

SOUTH ARPIN

A large number of young folks from here attended the fair at Marshfield.

Otto Zager of Grand Rapids is visiting with his aunt Mrs. Krause.

John Nimm purchased a threshing outfit and will start threshing this week.

Mrs. Groth and daughter Paula visited at the Gust Hessler home Sunday.

Eight Cows Killed by Jag.

Sterling, Ill., Aug. 11.—Fourteen young Hereford cows today had their first experience with whiskey at the farm of John David, their owner. For eight of them it was also their last experience. They are dead. Six others are sobering up and philosophizing.

Heavy rains had soaked through the silo in which fodder had been stored for the cattle. It was hot. The corn fermented and crude whiskey poured in little puddles about the bottom of the silo.

The cows partook. Then they zigzagged towards the creek and stumbled in. The six remorseful ones were hauled out; the others were drowned.

MEEHAN

Politicians and office seekers are frequent callers now days.

E. S. Hunt of Endeavor has been working throughout this vicinity in the interests of the Beavers.

Bert Oleson of Amherst came over here Sunday and spent the day visiting with friends.

All interested parties remember that the railroad commissioners will be here Friday, Aug. 30th at 10 o'clock to consider the question of a new depot.

Orrin Clendenning had a very serious time last week with an attack of ptomaine poisoning. By the care of a physician he has recovered and is alright again.

Saul Goodin of Linwood was a business caller here Friday.

Mr. and Mrs Clinton Moss of Plover visited here Sunday with relatives.

Rev. Taylor of Turtle Lake was here and held church services several times last week. He is an able speaker and was listened to with interest.

Quite an interesting time and perhaps a beneficial experience happened at Orrin Pike's place last Friday afternoon by a fire among his grain stacks. He had nine large stacks which stood very close together and had just begun threshing and as the engine stood very close to the stacks the dry straw easily ignited by a spark. The wind blew quite strong but about forty persons soon came to the rescue and the fire was soon under control with the loss of one stack of grain and causing quite an alarm.

RUDOLPH

Peter Krommenaker Sr., and daughter Pauline were in your city on Saturday.

Peter Krommenaker, Antone Krommenaker, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Kersten and Miss Pauline Krommenaker were in your city on Saturday doing some shopping.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Kersten returned to their home in Rudolph after spending some time visiting relatives and friends at Port Edwards.

NEKOOSA

(From the Times)

A meeting of business men and citizens of Nekoosa was held at Henry E. Fitch's office Saturday night, when the question of a bridge across the Wisconsin river here was discussed in all its phases. Nothing definite was accomplished. A committee was appointed to secure the services of an expert to come here, look over the ground and give an estimate of the cost of a bridge. After the gentleman has made his estimate another meeting will be held, at which reports will be made and further action taken. We trust every business man, merchant and taxpayer in the village and community will be present at the next meeting and full and free expression of opinion given.

Adolph Sauger and Miss Martha Zurfluh were united in marriage at La Crosse Wednesday morning, August 21, 1912. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Zurfluh and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Sauger, all of Nekoosa. Both the young people are well known here and are well respected. Adolph is telegraph operator for the St. Paul railway at Clayton, Iowa.

Marvin Lynn and son-in-law, Mr. Sager, of Grand Rapids, came down Saturday and Monday moved Mr Lynn's household goods to the capital, where he and Mrs. Lynn are making their home.

KELLNER

A number of friends surprised Fred. Grey last Thursday evening. That day being his 36th birthday. After spending the evening in a social way all returned to their respective homes, reporting a good time.

The new concrete platform at our depot is now completed and looks a lot better than the old one. The carpenters are now at work repairing the section house.

Ed. Johnson is hauling the cucumbers to your city this year. He took three thousand pounds last Friday.

The Haselmyer Bros. now living on a big farm on the marsh, threshed 1300 bushels of rye. But now we are sorry to hear that they are going to leave us and move back to Ill. You'll miss all of those nice marsh fires and sandy roads when you get down there. So you better "stick". Mr. Eggert has an option on the farm.

An auction will be held at the Wm. Getzlaff farm soon as he is going to move away. Where to? Well you might know Ill. Henry and Rudolph Getzlaff of your city have rented the farm from Wm.

Rev. A. Krusche returned last Monday from Athens, where he had been on Sunday last.

Mr. Wm. Munroe from Nebraska, and J. B. Munroe of Ill, are visiting at the home of their nephew G. H. Munroe.

F. Gray and family went to Princeton last Monday to help celebrate the "German Day". Reports are that Fred was and is quite a flying Dutchman.

Miss M. Peickard of Stevens Point, returned to her home after spending a few days at the parsonage.

The Kellner ball team was defeated by a score of 93 to 65 last Sunday. New Rome played with the locals. Well the next time the boys better get off from the diamond and get onto a piece of marsh land and play marbles. It is reported that the constable umpired the game. And every time he made a decision the grasshoppers would call it rotten, so what are you going to do? The best thing is to retire from the baseball circle till you players get older.

Section 6. Permission to place or maintain poles for the purposes specified in this ordinance shall not be construed to grant to said company the right to use or rent said poles for advertising purposes.

Section 7. This ordinance shall not be construed as giving to said company any vested rights, but shall be subject to modifications, amendments or repeal by the village board of Biron at any time.

Section 7. We meet and converse with a great many farmers and laboring men, but we do not know one farmer or laboring man who will vote for Taft. If Taft can hold the "Taft Republican" vote in Lincoln county, which is about 300 votes, he will do well. Granger, father-in-law of Mr. Roberts', has taken possession of the farm and will reside on it. Mr. Demski will move to Chicago where he will make his home. The deal was made thru the J H. Linderman agency.

The Double Standard.

Miss Ida M. Tarbell, in drawing up her indictment against man in the American Magazine, enumerates among other wrongs the establishment of a different standard of morality for the sexes. She says:

"He has created a false public sentiment by giving to the world a different code of morals for men and women, by which moral delinquencies which exclude women from society are not only tolerated but deemed of little account in man."

Now, to be perfectly honest about this, is it really man's fault that a different standard exists?

No man can enjoy any social standing whatever unless he is recognized by women. If women would treat the erring man with the same coldness she exhibits toward her sister who has gone astray, the double standard would cease to exist.—Wausau Herald.

Should Women Vote.

An Italian workman struck a fellow workman over the head with a club at Trempealeau last week, and the only reason there was not a murder case for Trempealeau Co tax payers to pay for was because the wielder of the club did not have as much strength as he thought he had. The man who tried to kill escaped A farmer's wife heard that a pass was out in search of the rubber and, when she saw him hiking along the highway, trying to escape, she took her husband's shot gun, rushed out to the road and made the Italian stand still and hold up his hands until the posse came along and captured him. And still, there are some high society people who think it perfectly proper for that same Italian to vote, but improper for the farmer's wife to cast her ballot. Perhaps they are all right, but we side with the woman behind the gun.—B. R. Falls Journal

For singles—trap or field—just toss in a shell, press the button and—"PULL." The side bolt makes it easy. You don't have to tug at the barrel or watch an on-and-off device. The action stays open after each single shot is fired.—It always stays open when the magazine is empty. Five shots—three to get the cripples—each under absolute control of the trigger finger. The recoil reloads for you—kicks another shell in; takes the strain off the gun—the discomfort out of the kick—all without diminishing the drive behind the shot.

Simple take-down—a few turns of the readily handled magazine screw-cap makes cleaning, carrying and interchange of barrels quick and easy.

Throw Away Harmful Drugs

Let Chiropractic Make You Well

The old method of administering a different drug for every different ailment of the human body, is being superceded by the newer and more rational methods of drugless healing. A drug seldom acts the same on two different persons, hence its uncertainty.

Chiropractic, the new method of drugless healing, awakens and frees the same life giving, health producing, force in one patient as another. It complies with natural laws and works in harmony with them. By its method of relieving nerve pressure it opens the highways of health, allowing the life-giving nerve force to pass unhampered to the weak and depleted organs.

A diseased organ again supplied with its full quota of nerve force cannot long remain diseased, but will steadly gain in strength until it can perform its natural functions with ease.

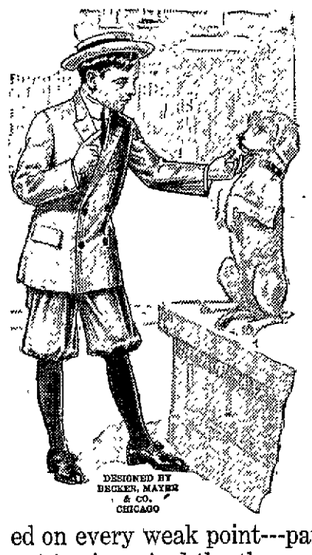

If you are sick, thats enough. You need help. Chiropractic's mission is to help the afflicted to help them permanently by removing the cause of sickness. Decide today to try Chiropractic.

The Double Standard.

Miss Ida M. Tarbell, in drawing up her indictment against man in the American Magazine, enumerates among other wrongs the establishment of a different standard of morality for the sexes. She says:

"He has created a false public sentiment by giving to the world a different code of morals for men and women, by which moral delinquencies which exclude women from society are not only tolerated but deemed of little account in man."

Now, to be perfectly honest about this, is it really man's fault that a different standard exists?

No man can enjoy any social standing whatever unless he is recognized by women. If women would treat the erring man with the same coldness she exhibits toward her sister who has gone astray, the double standard would cease to exist.—Wausau Herald.

Should Women Vote.

An Italian workman struck a fellow workman over the head with a club at Trempealeau last week, and the only reason there was not a murder case for Trempealeau Co tax payers to pay for was because the wielder of the club did not have as much strength as he thought he had. The man who tried to kill escaped. A farmer's wife heard that a posse was out in search of the clubber and, when she saw him hiking along the highway, trying to escape, she took her husband's shot gun, rushed out into the road and made the Italian stand still and hold up his hands until the posse came along and captured him. And still, there are some high society people who think it perfectly proper for that same Italian to vote, but improper for the farmer's wife to cast her ballot. Perhaps they are all right, but we side with the woman behind the gun.—B. R. Falls Journal.

The ADVENTURE OF THE DEVIL'S FOOT

"Our next obvious step is to check, so far as we can, the movements of Mortimer Tregennis after he left the room. In this there is no difficulty, and they seem to be above suspicion. Knowing my methods as you do, you were, of course, conscious of the somewhat clumsy water-pot expedient by which I obtained a clearer impress of his foot than might otherwise have been possible. The wet, sandy path took it admirably. Last night was also wet, you will remember, and it was not difficult—having obtained a sample print—to pick out his track among others and to follow his movements. He appears to have walked swiftly in the direction of the vicarage.

"If, then, Mortimer Tregennis disappeared from the scene, and yet some outside person affected the card players, how can we reconstruct that person, and how was such an impression of horror conveyed? Mrs. Porter may be eliminated. She is evidently harmless. Is there any evidence that some one crept up to the garden window and in some manner produced so terrific an effect that he drove those who saw it out of their senses? The only suggestion in this direction comes from Mortimer Tregennis himself, who says that his brother spoke about some movement in the garden. That is certainly remarkable, as the night was rainy, cloudy and dark. Anyone who had the design to alarm these people would be compelled to place his very face against the glass before he could be seen. There is a three-foot flower border outside this window, but no indication of a footmark. It is difficult to imagine, then, how an outsider could have made so terrible an impression upon the company, nor have we found any motive for so strange and elaborate an attempt. You perceive our difficulties, Watson?"

"They are only too clear," I answered, with conviction.

"And yet, with a little more material, we may prove that they are not insurmountable," said Holmes. "I fancy that among your extensive archives, Watson, you may find some which were nearly as obscure. Meanwhile, we shall put the case aside until more accurate data are available, and devote the morning to the pursuit of neolithic man."

I may have commented upon my friend's power of mental detachment, but never have I wondered at it more than upon that spring morning in Cornwall when for two hours he discoursed upon celts, arrowheads and shards as lightly as if no sinister mystery was waiting for his solution. It was not until we had returned in the afternoon to our cottage that we found a visitor awaiting us, who soon brought our minds back to the matter in hand. Neither of us needed to be told who that visitor was. The huge body, the craggy and deeply seamed face with the fierce eyes and hawk-like nose, the grizzled hair which nearly brushed our cottage ceiling, the beard—golden at the fringes and white near the lips, save for the nicotine stain from his perpetual cigar—all these were as well known in London as in Africa, and could only be associated with the personality of Dr. Leon Sterndale, the great lion hunter and explorer.

We had heard of his presence in the district, and had once or twice caught sight of his tall figure upon the moorland paths. He made no advances to us, however, nor would we have dreamed of doing so to him, as it was well known that it was his love of seclusion which caused him to spend the greater part of the intervals between his journeys in a small bungalow buried in the lonely wood of Beauchamp Arriance. Here, amid his books and his maps, he lived an absolutely lonely life, attending to his own simple wants, and paying little apparent heed to the affairs of his neighbors. It was a surprise to me, therefore, to hear him asking Holmes, in an eager voice, whether he had made any advance in his reconstruction of this mysterious episode. "The county police are utterly at fault," said he; "but perhaps your wider experience has suggested some conceivable explanation. My only claim to being taken into your confidence is that during my many residences here I have come to know this family of Tregennis very well—indeed, upon my Cornish mother's side I could call them cousins—and their strange fate has naturally been a great shock to me. I may tell you that I had got as far as Plymouth upon my way to Africa, but the news reached me this morning, and I came straight back again to help in the inquiry."

Holmes raised his eyebrows.

"Did you lose your boat through it?"

"I will take the next."

"Dear me! that is friendship indeed."

"I tell you they were relatives."

"Quite so—cousins of your mother. Was your baggage aboard the ship?"

"Some of it, but the main part at the hotel."

"I see. But surely this event could not have found its way into the Plymouth morning papers?"

"No, sir; I had a telegram."

"Might I ask from whom?"

"You are very inquisitive, Mr. Holmes."

"It is my business."

"I have no objection to telling you," he said. "It was Mr. Roundhay, the vicar, who sent me the telegram which recalled me."

"Thank you," said Holmes. "I may say, in answer to your original question, that I have not cleared my mind entirely on the subject of this case, but I have every hope of reaching some conclusion. It would be premature to say more."

"Perhaps you would tell me if your suspicions point in any particular direction?"

"No, I can hardly answer that."

"Then I have wasted my time, and need not prolong my visit." The famous doctor strode out of our cottage in considerable ill-humor, and within five minutes Holmes had followed him. I saw him no more until the evening, when he returned with a slow step and haggard face which assured me that he had made no great progress with his investigation. He glanced at a telegram which awaited him, and threw it into the grate.

"From the Plymouth hotel, Watson," he said. "I learned the name of it from the vicar and I wired to make certain that Dr. Leon Sterndale's account was true. It appears that he did indeed spend last night there, and that he has actually allowed some of his baggage to go on to Africa, while he returned to be present at this investigation. What do you make of that, Watson?"

"He is deeply interested."

"Deeply interested—yes. There is a thread here which we have not yet grasped, and which might lead us through the tangle. Cheer up, Watson, for I am very sure that our material has not yet all come to hand. When it does, we may soon leave our difficulties behind us."

Little did I think how soon the words of Holmes would be realized, or how strange and sinister would be that new development which opened up an entirely fresh line of investigation. I was shaving at my window in the morning when I heard the rattle of boots, and, looking up, saw a dog-cart coming at a gallop down the road. It pulled up at our door, and our friend the vicar sprang from it and rushed up our garden path. Holmes was already dressed, and we hastened down to meet him.

Our visitor was so excited that he could hardly articulate, but at last in gasps and bursts his tragic story came out of him.

"We are devil-ridden, Mr. Holmes! My poor parish is devil-ridden!" he cried. "Satan himself is loose in it! We are given over into his hands!" He danced about in his agitation, a ludicrous object if it were not for his ashy face and startled eyes. Finally he shot out his terrible news.

"Mr. Mortimer Tregennis has died during the night, and with exactly the same symptoms as the rest of the family."

Holmes sprang to his feet, all energy in an instant.

"Can you fit us both into your dog-cart?"

"Yes, I can."

"Then, Watson, we will postpone our breakfast. Mr. Roundhay, we are entirely at your disposal. Hurry—hurry, before things get disarranged."

The lodger occupied two rooms at the vicarage, which were in an angle by themselves, the one above the other. Below was a large sitting-room; above, his bedroom. They looked out upon a croquet lawn which came up to the windows. We had arrived before the doctor or the police, so that everything was absolutely undisturbed. Let me describe exactly the scene as we saw it upon that misty March morning. It has left an impression which can never be effaced from my mind.

The atmosphere of the room was of a horrible and depressing stuffiness. The servant who had first entered had thrown up the window, or it would have been even more intolerable. This might partly be due to the fact that a lamp stood flaring and smoking on the center table. Beside it sat the dead man, leaning back in his chair, his thin beard projecting, his spectacles pushed up on to his forehead, and his lean, dark face turned towards the window and twisted into the same distortion of terror which had marked the features of his dead sister. His limbs were convulsed and his fingers contorted, as though he had died in a very paroxysm of fear. He was fully clothed, though there were signs that his dressing had been done in a hurry. We had already learned that his bed had been slept in, and that the tragic end had come to him in the early morning.

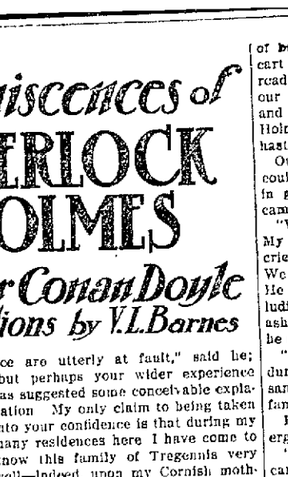

One realized the red-hot energy which underlay Holmes' phlegmatic exterior when I saw the sudden change which came over him from the moment that he entered the fatal apartment. In an instant he was tense and alert, his eyes shining, his face set, his limbs quivering with an eager activity. He was out on the lawn, in through the window, round the room, and up into the bedroom, for all the world like a dashing foxhound drawing a cover. In the bedroom he made a rapid cast around, and ended by throwing open the window, which appeared to give him some fresh cause for excitement, for he leaned out of it with loud ejaculations of interest and delight. Then he rushed down the stair, out through the open window, threw himself upon his face on the lawn, sprang up and into the room once more, all with the energy of the hunter who is at the very heels of his quarry. The lamp, which was an ordinary standard, he examined with minute care, making certain measurements upon its bowl. He carefully scrutinized with his lens the talc shield which covered the top of the chimney, and scraped off some ashes which adhered to its upper surface, putting some of them into an envelope, which he placed in his pocket-book. Finally, just as the doctor and the official police put in an appearance, he beckoned to the vicar and we all three went out upon the lawn.

Feathered Pet on Watch

Bringing home a canary in a cage, a Yonkers man gave it to his wife as a birthday present and the songster was established in the lady's boudoir, not far from a crib in which the household baby took daily naps. The tot immediately became interested in his new neighbor and the bird would fly against the bars of his brass prison in efforts to get nearer the child. But the pair got better acquainted when the baby was held up to the cage and had its fingers thrust inside the bars. On such occasions the canary would hop on the baby's hand and gently peck at the tiny, dimpled digits.

After a few weeks the bird was often released and permitted to spread its wings in the room. Later it was given the freedom of the house, but although it flew into various rooms, it would not long remain absent from the boudoir and the crib. Baby and bird became intimate friends and the bird would hop on the baby's head and hands, but carefully avoided being clutched in the fat little fingers. When the infant goes to sleep the canary perches on the foot of the crib, and there it stays on guard until the little one awakes. And it is a good sentinel, for if any one approaches the sleeper it begins to sputter, ruffle its feathers and other-wise manifest symptoms of displeasure in approved bird fashion.—New York Press.

Oppose Eccentric Dances.

London hostesses, following the tradition of the land which found its way into the saying "Write a letter to the Times," are letting newspapers know that they will resist to the utmost any effort to introduce the grizzly bear hug and other American dances into English ballrooms. The newspapers themselves do not share the fear that these freaks of the waxed floor will gain a foothold there, but one of them says that "though the craze for freak dancing prevalent in America has not yet invaded England, the American influence is plainly visible in many English ballrooms, and eccentricities in dancing seem to be gaining favor with a section of the dancing public."

Hurt Industry of State.

The California Orange Growers' association is indignant over the unscrupulous conduct of a few orange growers who are injuring the state by shipping frozen oranges. This is a sensitive point with Californians, for while the state can produce and does produce superb oranges, there is always the risk of damage by frost and the greater damage to reputation done by an occasional shipment of spoiled fruit.

TO HOLD REUNION SEPTEMBER 5 AND 6

Twenty-First Wisconsin Will Celebrate Anniversary.

GATHERING IN FOND DU LAC

Regiment Organized at Camp Bragg, Oshkosh, in August and September, 1862—This Will Be the Twenty-Fifth Meeting.

Madison.—On September 5 and 6 the Twenty-first Wisconsin will hold its twenty-fifth annual reunion at Fond du Lac. This regiment was organized at Camp Bragg, Oshkosh, in August and September, 1862. This will be the fiftieth anniversary meeting of the survivors.

The regiment was fortunate in having for its field officers soldiers who had more than a year's experience in the army. Benjamin J. Sweet, a young lawyer of Calumet county, who, previous to becoming a lawyer was a public school teacher, was the first colonel. He had served a year in the Sixth Wisconsin, first as major and then as lieutenant colonel.

The original lieutenant colonel was Harrison C. Hobart, who for nearly twenty years before the war had been prominent as a Democratic politician, having once run for governor and twice for congress. He had been speaker of the assembly and served a term in the state senate. He ran for governor against Gen. Lucius Fairchild in 1865, after the war, and was defeated by a few thousand votes. Both Sweet and Hobart became brevet brigadiers.

The first major was Frederick Schumacher, Milwaukee, who had served as city engineer. He was a lieutenant and then a captain in the Sixth Wisconsin. The adjutant of the regiment was M. H. Fitch, who afterward was pension agent in Milwaukee. Adjutant Fitch became lieutenant colonel of the regiment.

The men had nearly three years of hard campaigning. It was in the battles of Perryville, Stone's River, Chickamauga, and at the latter battle lost heavily in prisoners, including Colonel Hobart, who was one of the leaders at Libby prison in digging the tunnel through which a large number of the prisoners made their escape. The regiment was in all of the battles from Chattanooga to Atlanta and went with Sherman to the sea.

Speed of Autos in Cities.

That a city or village may not pass an ordinance limiting the speed of automobiles within such corporation to eight miles an hour, or to any other speed less than prescribed by the general law of the state, namely 15 miles an hour, is held in an opinion by Attorney General Bancroft to Secretary of State Frear.

"It is well established," says the attorney general, "that a common council of a city cannot, in the exercise of its legislative grant, enact ordinances which are in conflict with the laws of the state."

Then, too, it is pointed out that the law regulating the speed of automobiles specifically provides that the provisions of the law "shall be uniform in operation throughout the state, and no city, village, county, town, park board or other local authority shall have power to enact, pass, enforce or maintain any ordinance, resolution, rule or regulation requiring local registration or other requirement inconsistent therewith."

"The legislature seems to have recognized the fact that the different cities of the state were enforcing different speed ordinances and that such differences caused unnecessary annoyance to users of automobiles, who could not be familiar with the speed regulations of each city," says the attorney general. Then, too, it is pointed out that the law itself provides for a lesser speed when particular conditions render that necessary to safety in that it prohibits "speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the width, traffic and use of the highways and the general and usual rules of the road."

The question arose out of the desire of the city of Janesville to pass an ordinance limiting the speed of automobiles in that city to eight miles an hour.

See Big Cranberry Crop.

According to the report of A. U. Chaney, New York, selling agent for cranberry growers, which was presented at the meeting of cranberry growers, the crop in Wisconsin will be an unusually large one. Last year Wisconsin produced 30,000 barrels, but it would reach 40,000 this year.

Names Separate Ballot.

In an opinion transmitted by Secretary of State James A. Frear Attorney General Bancroft ruled that the constitutional amendment granting the right of suffrage to women must go to a vote of the people on a separate ballot, and that all other amendments to be voted on at the November election must be placed on the general ballot below the names of the candidates. The ruling is based on chapters 633 and 665, laws of 1911.

Archaeologists Returning.

Several of the parties which the Wisconsin Archaeological society has had in the field in connection with the state survey have now returned. In the course of their journey of nearly 200 miles they succeeded in locating many groups and solitary Indian earthworks and sites of early camps, workshops, caches and other features of which there had been no previous state record. Excellent photographs of many of these were obtained.

New Incorporations.

Articles of incorporation were filed as follows: The Milwaukee Heat Generator company, Milwaukee; capital, $10,000; incorporators, Hubert Schumann, Andrew Andris and John Scheiber. The Powers Lake Yacht club, Powers Lake, Kenosha county; no capital; incorporators, O. H. Tuttle, C. E. Jones, Walter J. Lueders, Theodore W. Bunte and Charles F. L. Richter. The Oconto Falls Motor Car company, Oconto Falls; capital, $5,000; incorporators, J. H. Delbridge, W. J. Munsert and C. W. Carlson.

Milwaukee to Get Home for Animals.

At the recent meeting of the Wisconsin Humane society a resolution was adopted for the society to take immediate action toward establishing a home for unfortunate animals in Milwaukee. Mr. Philips' suggestion for having an exhibit at the state fair next month met with the approval of all.

E. B. Heimstreet of Palmyra, one of the directors of the society, in bringing up the matter of a home, suggested that Milwaukee be the location, for he understood that there were many willing to help financially such an institution. He also offered a resolution requesting the use of the state fair grounds, when not in use, for one year. H. K. Curtis seconded the motion and was followed by John Le Feber, who gave a short talk. Miss Lenora Cawker said that it was something that she had looked forward to for years, as she had now in her kennels more than forty cats and dogs which had been brought in during the week. Short talks also were given by Woods Plankinton, J. H. Kopmeier, J. F. Kraft, Frank Cannon, E. T. Fairchild, H. E. Philips and Miss Marshall.

In a unanimous vote it was decided to name the proposed institution the Cawker Memorial Home for Animals, and the matter was placed in the hands of the following committee: E. B. Heimstreet, chairman; Frank Cannon, E. T. Fairchild, H. L. Philips and Miss Lenore Cawker.

"Bull Moose" Plans State Convention.

This was decided at a conference of the leaders held in Milwaukee. About twenty-five were present at the conference, nearly all being from Milwaukee. Norman L. Baker, chairman of the state committee, presided.

The exact date for the state convention was left open, though it was understood that it would probably be Wednesday, September 18, during the week of the state fair. It was held that the fair would bring in thousands of persons from the state, and as Wednesday was always made state day that no better time could be named for the state convention.

The call for the convention will be issued within a few days by Chairman Baker, it is said. It will be accompanied by an address to the voters, setting forth the reasons for a "Bull Moose" party. As soon as the address is drafted the call will be issued.

Appoint Game Wardens.

Twenty-two 90-day appointments as deputy game wardens to serve during the fall hunting season were made by the state department, as follows: B. J. Shaver, Superior; B. A. Dunseth, Ingram; Peter Smoujesky, Green Bay; William F. Tonne, Shawano; J. L. Faber, Spring Valley; A. F. Peterson, Stockholm; C. M. Clark, Stoughton; S. J. Williams, Merrill; Edward Handley, Hackley; S. L. Novee, La Crosse; J. B. Busch, Madison; John Egan, Cleveland; George A. Willard, Bagley; G. A. Miller, Boscobel; George DeKoeyer, Baraboo; Alfred G. Becker, Allentown; William H. Davis, Pardee; S. M. Sayner, Sayner; L. E. Schreiter, Darlington; C. A. Follett, Oshkosh; J. V. Kelsey, Stevens Point; J. M. Lowe, Bancroft.

Try to Avoid Car Shortage.

Wisconsin and other northwestern states face a car shortage unparalleled since 1907. Traffic managers of leading western railroads, co-operating with the Association of Western Railways, are writing letters to shippers forecasting a scarcity of rolling stock within the next thirty days unless all interests co-operate for the prompt handling of shipments. Following this advice, the Wisconsin railroad commission is notifying leading manufacturers of the impending danger. It recommends that orders for future shipments be placed as soon as possible and that every effort be made to load and unload equipment so that there may be no delay in holding cars.

Motorcycle Race Feature.

Interest in the motorcycle races to be held at the state fair is far exceeding all expectations. Inquiries are received from speed "bike" riders from all parts of the country, and the card is certain to be well filled.

Indications are that in the future the motorcycle program will be a regular feature of the state fair speed card and not be considered as a specialty. Public interest alone is working the transformation and the board of agriculture has observed the "writing on the wall."

Orders to the Railroads.

The railroad commission issued an order requiring the Sheboygan Railway and Electric company to maintain an automatic alarm bell with an illuminated sign for night indication at the Green Bay road crossing in Sheboygan Falls. It ordered the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad company to maintain a similar alarm and sign at Reeson's crossing, two and one-half miles west of its station at Dodgeville. It ordered the Milwaukee road to keep a flagman at the Spring street crossing in Beaver Dam.

Award Coal Contracts.

The state board of control has awarded the contracts for the winter's supply of coal. In all, 40,000 tons of soft coal was purchased, the prices ranging from $2.75 to $3.90 a ton. The contracts provide an expenditure of $125,000.

A contract was awarded to the W. A. Bower Heating company, Milwaukee, to install three boilers at the industrial school for boys at Waukesha. Bond & Abraham, Milwaukee, were awarded a contract for resetting the boilers at hospital in Oshkosh.

A SUMMER AT THE SEABREEZE HOTEL

By HELEN ROSS.

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

"Young lady of refinement and culture desired as piano soloist at the Seabreeze hotel, Seabreeze, N. J. Board and room free. Liberal compensation. References desired," she read aloud.

"It's much better than trying to farm on land which will only raise rocks," she mused, "and as a chickeness, Maudie, you are not a howling success. I'll ask Jimmy Brooks to take charge of the place this summer. Then if the superaristocratic Seabreeze hotel will have me, I'll sally forth to make use of my one talent."

The details attended to, and references given, Maude hurried the letter to the postoffice before there was time or opportunity for a change of mind. As luck would have it, the Seabreeze hotel did want her, for in less than a month, she was journeying towards the fashionable summer resort. All that the management had claimed for the position proved true. It was a desirable one. Accustomed as she had been in former happier years to an assured social position, Maude felt the change keenly at first. Soon, however, her common sense triumphed, and she settled down to her really pleasant duties with a will.

People came and went in one continual stream. Occasionally some kindred spirit, struck by the real sparkle and ability of Maud's playing, struck up a superficial acquaintance, but for the most part, for all the attention shown her, she might as well have been in Jericho.

Always a keen observer of human nature, the great hotel offered a rich field for observation. Gradually the humor of the situation struck her and she noticed many amusing details. Petty jealousies, hypocritical actions, heartburns, and aimless flirtations passed before her eyes in a never-ending procession. Then, too, the library was exceptionally good and much of her leisure was spent perusing its fascinating contents. As usual, at a summer resort, men were more or less rare. A male arrival was pounced upon eagerly, especially if he were inclined to be generous with the coin of the realm. To an onlooker the strivings and smallnesses were entertaining.

Several weeks after her arrival she noticed a stranger among the guests, an intellectual-looking, rather shabby young man. Maud reasoned that he must be most obscure since his presence caused not the slightest ripple in the sea of feminine hearts. He was completely ignored.

One evening at dinner, Maud, accompanied by the orchestra, played a number of East Indian melodies. As she stopped from the platform she noticed that the strange young man was regarding her fixedly, his handsome gray eyes filled with dreamy contentment.

She went to the library, selected a book and settled down to an evening of quiet enjoyment. Suddenly she was aroused by a voice besides her. It was the shabby young man.

"Miss Gault, I wish to thank you for the pleasure your music has given me," he said in pleasant, well-bred accents.

Soon they were in an animated discussion of music and literature. The stranger was not only a gentleman, but a man of extreme culture as well.

"Why are you not at the beach party?" Maud inquired.

The young man smiled. "Because I was not invited. I can not afford to indulge in expensive summer pastimes. Consequently the girls have no time for me. Anyhow, why should I care when the very prettiest girl in the hotel is right here?"

Maud blushed and smiled, but as it was plain that he was sincere in his opinion, she allowed it to pass. Their talk drifted to lighter subjects, and before long the evening was over. The young man's name was James Clifford, and he was an author, he said.

A friendship sprang up between them which proved a source of great pleasure. Maud tactfully declined Mr. Clifford's simple invitations, vowing that she preferred the beach to all indoor amusements. The real reason was that she knew he was poor and could not afford even a slight sum.

One day they were sitting on the beach chatting when two fashionably dressed girls settled down near them. The hat of one blew off and she jumped to her feet in pursuit. It landed at Maud's feet, and as she arose to return it, she and the owner came face to face. The girl laughed harshly, caught up the hat, and without a word of thanks, went back to her companion.

"That's the gifted Miss Gault who pounds the piano at the Seabreeze, with some obscure nobody. We really must go over there some night and listen to the cat concert," she observed sarcastically.

Mr. Clifford glanced at Maud. He knew that she must have heard, yet her expression was one of utter indifference.

"I'm so sorry, Miss Gault," he said.

"It really doesn't matter, I assure you," returned Maud. "Her father is the most corrupt politician in our state. My father, when governor, fought him and his interests for years. He ruined dad at last. Poor man, he died penniless. All he was able to leave me was a stony bit of farmland, while this man Warsh and his daughter are rolling in wealth. No wonder she is bitter—their money never procured a social position for her."

The young man exclaimed in surprise: "Why, you must be Governor Gault's daughter! I admired him more than any man in public life. It is an honor to meet his daughter. He put up a brave fight to protect his state from Warsh, and it will be remembered by the people for many a long day."

They shook hands and straightway forgot all about the incident in discussing the estimable qualities of the late governor.

Mr. Clifford stayed all summer, and before October came he and Maud were engaged to be married.

"I will not always be poor, nor will my wife ever repent her choice," he assured her.

Maud glanced at him proudly. In spite of his unfashionable garments, Mr. Clifford's bearing and appearance was that of a man who is bound to meet with success.

"As though that makes any difference," she whispered.

Summer drifted into autumn, and gradually the merry guests were departing to their homes. For Maud and Mr. Clifford those days were cloudless. Miss Warsh kept her word, and more than once Maud discerned her mocking face among the diners. One evening her harsh tones were audible all over the dining room as she rustled into it.

"Oh, girls, Robert Merrell just arrived. He came in the most stunning motor imaginable. I saw him when I entered the hotel a minute ago. He's at the desk now signing the register."

Breathless excitement followed this announcement. Robert Merrill was one of America's foremost capitalists. Maud sat on the little pattern privately speculating as to the appearance of the famous man. When it was time for her solo, she straightway forgot all about him.

Suddenly she was conscious of a buzz of conversation, which died down to an expectant pause. She glanced up and saw two gentlemen enter the dining room. The elder she recognized at once as Robert Merrell. He was conversing with a companion in an affectionate, interested manner. And the other man was John Clifford!

It was fortunate for Maud that her solo ended just then, for she saw her fiance and Mr. Merrell coming towards her.

"This is my future wife," announced Mr. Clifford proudly.

"I am most happy to meet you, my dear," he said simply. "For years this absurd boy of mine has been afraid that his wealth would influence a girl in his favor. I have always wished him to marry young. Also, I am pleased to have him love Gault's girl."

"His wealth?" stammered Maud.

Merrell looked from her to Clifford in surprise.

"I've never told her, father," the young man observed. Turning to Maud he added, "James Clifford is my pen-name. I am writing a book on 'The Worth of Social Position.' As James Merrell I am received with open arms. As James Clifford, to quote Miss Warsh, I am an obscure nobody. It has been an interesting experiment. I took the liberty of asking the hotel people to release you for the short time which remains of the season, and tomorrow we will be married. This is why my father is here. I own this hotel. Come now, dear, we will all dine together."

The trio passed on to a table, oblivious of the frantic curiosity—in fact oblivious to everything but their own happiness. So Miss Warsh's bitter remark "that the sly minx knew it all along," dissolved into the rosy hue of contentment which surrounded them.

Preponderance of Women.

Of recent years the custom of making a systematic census of the population has become well established, throughout all civilized countries, and it is now possible to gain a fairly accurate idea of conditions all the world over. Some of the figures now cited in regard to this matter are interesting. The world's total population is estimated at 1,700 millions, out of which the proportion of the sexes is known for 1,038,000,000, the ratio being 1,000 males to 990 females. The ratio varies very considerably in different places. In Europe there were, for every 1,000 men, 1,027 women; Africa, 1,045; America, 964; Asia, 961; Australia, 937. The maximum proportion of women is found in Uganda, 1,467; the minimum in the Alaska gold fields and the Malay States, with 391 and 389 respectively.

Thinking of the Singers.

"Do you care for Esperanto?" he asked the sweet young thing as they were demolishing plates of cream after the opera.

"Which was he?" replied the sweet young thing. "The one with the blonde moustache?"

Scientific Attainment.

The porcus lead of Prof. H. T. Hanover of the Danish Polytechnic high school of Copenhagen, is said to be the result of many years of study of the problem of accumulator efficiency. The lead is filled with cavities so small as to be visible only through a powerful microscope, but they diminish weight, and they add so much to the surface that it is said storage batteries have their capacity increased five times without addition to their size or weight.

Floating Baths Condemned.

Floating baths near great cities are now condemned by sanitary authorities. The vast quantities of sewage that are discharged into the waters that usually border such cities are thought to be productive of disease to bathers, and certainly render their ablutions of doubtful value as a cleansing agency.

Curing Macaroni.

WILLING HE SHOULD GO FAR

One Man to Have Kid Transferred, but He May Have Had a Grouch.

"What do you think of this scheme of having the countries exchange children?" asked the Sewickley man.

"I don't think anything about it," said the Wilkinsburg man. "What is the idea?"

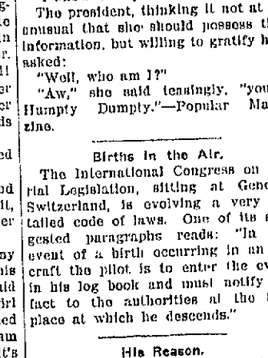

"An English family, for instance, exchanges children for a couple of years with a German family. References are first exchanged and all that sort of thing."

"I see."

"Thus both sets of children get a chance to learn another language and get acquainted with another country. It's quite a scheme."

"It's an elegant scheme," declared the Wilkinsburg man. "My neighbors have a kid that I would like to see exchanged with some family in Siberia."

ALMOST INCREDIBLE

Wakely—Whirly must be making an awful lot of money.

Wisely—I should say he is. I actually believe he is making more than his wife can spend.

Carrying It Too Far.

"Scientific management, like any other good thing, may be carried to excess."

"We scientific managers mustn't go as far as Hussler went.

"Hussler was the proprietor of a tremendous factory where scientific management had reduced the motions of every hand from 869 to 17. Hussler attended a very fashionable wedding one day, a wedding where the ceremony was performed by a bishop, assisted by a dean and a canon, and in the most impressive part of the writ Hussler, overcome by his scientific management ideas, rushed up to the altar and pushed the bishop and canon rudely back.

Case of Mistaken Identity.

President Taft was out for his afternoon walk in Washington one day when a flaxen-haired little girl ran out in front of him, held up her finger, and exclaimed, in a shrill voice:

"I know who you are!"

The president, thinking it not at all unusual that she should possess this information, but willing to gratify her, asked:

"Well, who am I?"

Births in the Air.

The International Congress on Aerial Legislation, sitting at Geneva, Switzerland, is evolving a very detailed code of laws. One of its suggested paragraphs reads: "In the event of a birth occurring in an air craft the pilot is to enter the event in his log book and must notify the fact to the authorities at the first place at which he descends."

His Reason.

If it were not for the trusts whom would a man who fails in business blame for it?

WELL PEOPLE TOO

Wise Doctor Gives Postum to Convalescents.

A wise doctor tries to give nature its best chance by saving the little strength of the already exhausted patient, and building up wasted energy with simple but powerful nourishment:

"Five years ago," writes a doctor "I commenced to use Postum in my own family instead of coffee." (It's a well-known fact that tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.) "I was so well pleased with the results that I had two grocers place it in stock, guaranteeing its sale.

"I then commenced to recommend it to my patients in place of coffee, as a nutritious beverage. The consequence is, every store in town is now selling it, as it has become a household necessity in many homes.

"I'm sure I prescribe Postum as often as any one remedy in the Materia Medica—in almost every case of indigestion and nervousness I treat, and with the best results.

"When I once introduce it into a family, it is quite sure to remain. I shall continue to use it and prescribe it in families where I practice.

"In convalescence from pneumonia, typhoid fever and other cases I give it as a liquid, easily absorbed diet. You may use my letter as a reference any way you see fit." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"Our next obvious step is to check, so far as we can, the movements of Mortimer Tregennis after he left the room. In this there is no difficulty, and they seem to be above suspicion. Knowing my methods as you do, you were, of course, conscious of the somewhat clumsy water-pot expedient by which I obtained a clearer impress of his foot than might otherwise have been possible. The wet, sandy path took it admirably. Last night was also wet, you will remember, and it was not difficult—having obtained a sample print—to pick out his track among others and to follow his movements. He appears to have walked swiftly in the direction of the vicarage.

"If, then, Mortimer Tregennis disappeared from the scene, and yet some outside person affected the card players, how can we reconstruct that person, and how was such an impression of horror conveyed? Mrs. Porter may be eliminated. She is evidently harmless. Is there any evidence that some one crept up to the garden window and in some manner produced so terrific an effect that he drove those who saw it out of their senses? The only suggestion in this direction comes from Mortimer Tregennis himself, who says that his brother spoke about some movement in the garden. That is certainly remarkable, as the night was rainy, cloudy and dark. Anyone who had the design to alarm these people would be compelled to place his very face against the glass before he could be seen. There is a three-foot flower border outside this window, but no indication of a footmark. It is difficult to imagine, then, how an outsider could have made so terrible an impression upon the company, nor have we found any motive for so strange and elaborate an attempt. You perceive our difficulties, Watson?"

"They are only too clear," I answered, with conviction.

"And yet, with a little more material, we may prove that they are not insurmountable," said Holmes. "I fancy that among your extensive archives, Watson, you may find some which were nearly as obscure. Meanwhile, we shall put the case aside until more accurate data are available, and devote the morning to the pursuit of neolithic man."

I may have commented upon my friend's power of mental detachment, but never have I wondered at it more than upon that spring morning in Cornwall when for two hours he discoursed upon celts, arrowheads and shards as lightly as if no sinister mystery was waiting for his solution. It was not until we had returned in the afternoon to our cottage that we found a visitor awaiting us, who soon brought our minds back to the matter in hand. Neither of us needed to be told who that visitor was. The huge body, the craggy and deeply seamed face with the fierce eyes and hawk-like nose, the grizzled hair which nearly brushed our cottage ceiling, the beard—golden at the fringes and white near the lips, save for the nicotine stain from his perpetual cigar—all these were as well known in London as in Africa, and could only be associated with the personality of Dr. Leon Sterndale, the great lion hunter and explorer.

We had heard of his presence in the district, and had once or twice caught sight of his tall figure upon the moor-

land paths. He made no advances to us, however, nor would we have dreamed of doing so to him, as it was well known that it was his love of seclusion which caused him to spend the greater part of the intervals between his journeys in a small bungalow buried in the lonely wood of Beauchamp Arrlance. Here, amid his books and his maps, he lived an absolutely lonely life, attending to his own simple wants, and paying little apparent heed to the affairs of his neighbors. It was a surprise to me, therefore, to hear him asking Holmes, in an eager voice, whether he had made any advance in his reconstruction of this mysterious episode. "The county police are utterly at fault," said he; "but perhaps your wider experience has suggested some conceivable explanation. My only claim to being taken into your confidence is that during my many residences here I have come to know this family of Tregennis very well—indeed, upon my Cornish mother's side I could call them cousins—and their strange fate has naturally been a great shock to me. I may tell you that I had got as far as Plymouth upon my way to Africa, but the news reached me this morning, and I came straight back again to help in the inquiry."

Holmes raised his eyebrows.

"Did you lose your boat through it?"

"I will take the next."

"Dear me! that is friendship indeed."

"I tell you they were relatives."

"Quite so—cousins of your mother. Was your baggage aboard the ship?"

"I see. But surely this event could not have found its way into the Plymouth morning papers?"

"No, sir; I had a telegram."

"Might I ask from whom?"

"You are very inquisitive, Mr. Holmes."

"It is my business."

"I have no objection to telling you,"

By It Sat the Dead Man.

he said. "It was Mr. Roundhay, the vicar, who sent me the telegram which recalled me."

"Thank you," said Holmes. "I may say, in answer to your original question, that I have not cleared my mind entirely on the subject of this case, but I have every hope of reaching some conclusion. It would be premature to say more."

"Perhaps you would tell me if your suspicions point in any particular direction?"

"No, I can hardly answer that."

"Then I have wasted my time, and need not prolong my visit." The famous doctor strode out of our cottage in considerable ill-humor, and within five minutes Holmes had followed him. I saw him no more until the evening, when he returned with a slow step and haggard face which assured me that he had made no great progress with his investigation. He glanced at a telegram which awaited him, and threw it into the grate.

"From the Plymouth hotel, Watson," he said. "I learned the name of it from the vicar and I wired to make certain that Dr. Leon Sterndale's account was true. It appears that he did indeed spend last night there, and that he has actually allowed some of his baggage to go on to Africa, while he returned to be present at this investigation. What do you make of that, Watson?"

"He is deeply interested."

"Deeply interested—yes. There is a thread here which we have not yet grasped, and which might lead us through the tangle. Cheer up, Watson, for I am very sure that our material has not yet all come to hand. When it does, we may soon leave our difficulties behind us."

Little did I think how soon the words of Holmes would be realized, or how strange and sinister would be that new development which opened up an entirely fresh line of investigation. I was shaving at my window in the morning when I heard the rattle of hoofs, and, looking up, saw a cart coming at a gallop down the road. It pulled up at our door, and our friend the vicar sprang from it and rushed up our garden path. Holmes was already dressed, and we hastened down to meet him.

Our visitor was so excited that he could hardly articulate, but at last in gasps and bursts his tragic story came out of him.

"We are devil-ridden, Mr. Holmes! My poor parish is devil-ridden!" he cried. "Satan himself is loose in it! We are given over into his hands!" He danced about in his agitation, a ludicrous object if it were not for his ashy face and startled eyes. Finally he shot out his terrible news.

"Mr. Mortimer Tregennis has died during the night, and with exactly the same symptoms as the rest of the family."

"Can you fit us both into your dog-cart?"

"Yes, I can."

"Then, Watson, we will postpone our breakfast. Mr. Roundhay, we are entirely at your disposal. Hurry—hurry, before things get disarranged."

The lodger occupied two rooms at the vicarage, which were in an angle by themselves, the one above the other. Below was a large sitting-room; above, his bedroom. They looked out upon a croquet lawn which came up to the windows. We had arrived before the doctor or the police, so that everything was absolutely undisturbed. Let me describe exactly the scene as we saw it upon that misty March morning. It has left an impression which can never be effaced from my mind.

The atmosphere of the room was of a horrible and depressing stuffiness. The servant who had first entered had thrown up the window, or it would have been even more intolerable. This might partly be due to the fact that a lamp stood flaring and smoking on the center table. Beside it sat the dead man, leaning back in his chair, his thin beard projecting, his spectacles pushed up on to his forehead, and his lean, dark face turned towards the window and twisted into the same distortion of terror which had marked the features of his dead sister. His limbs were convulsed and his fingers contorted, as though he had died in a very paroxysm of fear. He was fully clothed, though there were signs that his dressing had been done in a hurry. We had already learned that his bed had been slept in, and that the tragic end had come to him in the early morning.

One realized the red-hot energy which underlay Holmes' phlegmatic exterior when I saw the sudden change which came over him from the moment that he entered the fatal apartment. In an instant he was tense and alert, his eyes shining, his face set, his limbs quivering with an eager activity. He was out on the lawn, in through the window, round the room, and up into the bedroom, for all the world like a dashing foxhound drawing a cover. In the bedroom he made a rapid cast around, and ended by throwing open the window, which appeared to give him some fresh cause for excitement, for he leaned out of it with loud ejaculations of interest and delight. Then he rushed down the stair, out through the open window, threw himself upon his face on the lawn, sprang up and into the room once more, all with the energy of the hunter who is at the very heels of his quarry. The lamp, which was an ordinary standard, he examined with minute care, making certain measurements upon its bowl. He carefully scrutinized with his lens the talc shield which covered the top of the chimney, and scraped off some ashes which adhered to its upper surface, putting some of them into an envelope, which he placed in his pocket-book. Finally, just as the doctor and the official police put in an appearance, he beckoned to the vicar and we all three went out upon the lawn.

Feathered Pet on Watch

Bringing home a canary in a cage, a Yonkers man gave it to his wife as a birthday present and the songster was established in the lady's boudoir, not far from a crib in which the household baby took daily naps. The tot immediately became interested in his new neighbor and the bird would fly against the bars of his brass prison in efforts to get nearer the child. But the pair got better acquainted when the baby was held up to the cage and had its fingers thrust inside the bars. On such occasions the canary would hop on the baby's hand and gently peck at the tiny, dimpled digits.

After a few weeks the bird was often released and permitted to spread its wings in the room. Later it was given the freedom of the house, but although it flew into various rooms, it would not long remain absent from the boudoir and the crib. Baby and bird became intimate friends and the bird would hop on the baby's head and hands, but carefully avoided being clutched in the fat little fingers. When the infant goes to sleep the canary perches on the foot of the crib, and there it stays on guard until the little one awakes. And it is a good sentinel, for if any one approaches the sleeper it begins to sputter, ruffle its feathers and otherwise manifest symptoms of displeasure in approved bird fashion.—New York Press.

Unique Features in Bull Fight.

At El Toreo plaza bulls from six of the leading ganaderias of the republic fought in a benefit for the white cross, and a unique feature was introduced in that there were prizes offered for the bravest bull of the afternoon and for the best type of fighting bull shown. A prize of $1,000 was hung up for the bravest bull, and a committee of aficionados chosen which sat as a sort of jury and rendered a decision.—Mexican Herald.

Oppose Eccentric Dances.

London hostesses, following the tradition of the land which found its way into the saying "Write a letter to the Times," are letting newspapers know that they will resist to the utmost any effort to introduce the grizzly bear hug and other American dances into English ballrooms. The newspapers themselves do not share the fear that these freaks of the waxed floor will gain a foothold there, but one of them says that "though the craze for freak dancing prevalent in America has not yet invaded England, the American influence is plainly visible in many English ballrooms, and eccentricities in dancing seem to be gaining favor with a section of the dancing public."

Hurt Industry of State.

The California Orange Growers' association is indignant over the unscrupulous conduct of a few orange growers who are injuring the state by shipping frozen oranges. This is a sensitive point with Californians, for while the state can produce and does produce superb oranges, there is always the risk of damage by frost and the greater damage to reputation done by an occasional shipment of spoiled fruit.

Explaining an Oversight.

TO HOLD REUNION SEPTEMBER 5 AND 6

Twenty-First Wisconsin Will Celebrate Anniversary.

GATHERING IN FOND DU LAC

Regiment Organized at Camp Bragg, Oshkosh, in August and September, 1862—This Will Be the Twenty-Fifth Meeting.

Madison.—On September 5 and 6 the Twenty-first Wisconsin will hold its twenty-fifth annual reunion at Fond du Lac. This regiment was organized at Camp Bragg, Oshkosh, in August and September, 1862. This will be the fiftieth anniversary meeting of the survivors.

The regiment was fortunate in having for its field officers soldiers who had more than a year's experience in the army. Benjamin J. Sweet, a young lawyer of Calumet county, who, previous to becoming a lawyer was a public school teacher, was the first colonel. He had served a year in the Sixth Wisconsin, first as major and then as lieutenant colonel.

The original lieutenant colonel was Harrison C. Hobart, who for nearly twenty years before the war had been prominent as a Democratic politician, having once run for governor and twice for congress. He had been speaker of the assembly and served a term in the state senate. He ran for governor against Gen. Lucius Fairchild in 1865, after the war, and was defeated by a few thousand votes. Both Sweet and Hobart became brevet brigadiers.

The first major was Frederick Schumacher, Milwaukee, who had served as city engineer. He was a lieutenant and then a captain in the Sixth Wisconsin. The adjutant of the regiment was M. H. Fitch, who afterward was pension agent in Milwaukee. Adjutant Fitch became lieutenant colonel of the regiment.

The men had nearly three years of hard campaigning. It was in the battles of Perryville, Stone's River, Chickamauga, and at the latter battle lost heavily in prisoners, including Colonel Hobart, who was one of the leaders at Libby prison in digging the tunnel through which a large number of the prisoners made their escape. The regiment was in all of the battles from Chattanooga to Atlanta and went with Sherman to the sea.

Speed of Autos in Cities.

That a city or village may not pass an ordinance limiting the speed of automobiles within such corporation to eight miles an hour, or to any other speed less than prescribed by the general law of the state, namely 15 miles an hour, is held in an opinion by Attorney General Bancroft to Secretary of State Frear.

"It is well established," says the attorney general, "that a common council of a city cannot, in the exercise of its legislative grant, enact ordinances which are in conflict with the laws of the state."

Then, too, it is pointed out that the law regulating the speed of automobiles specifically provides that the provisions of the law "shall be uniform in operation throughout the state, and no city, village, county, town, park board or other local authority shall have power to enact, pass, enforce or maintain any ordinance, resolution, rule or regulation requiring local registration or other requirement inconsistent therewith."

"The legislature seems to have recognized the fact that the different cities of the state were enforcing different speed ordinances and that such differences caused unnecessary annoyance to users of automobiles, who could not be familiar with the speed regulations of each city," says the attorney general. Then, too, it is pointed out that the law itself provides for a lesser speed when particular conditions render that necessary to safety in that it prohibits "speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the width, traffic and use of the highways and the general and usual rules of the road."

The question arose out of the desire of the city of Janesville to pass an ordinance limiting the speed of automobiles in that city to eight miles an hour.

See Big Cranberry Crop.

According to the report of A. U. Chaney, New York, selling agent for cranberry growers, which was presented at the meeting of cranberry growers, the crop in Wisconsin will be an unusually large one. Last year Wisconsin produced 30,000 barrels, but it would reach 40,000 this year.

Names Separate Ballot.

In an opinion transmitted by Secretary of State James A. Frear Attorney General Bancroft ruled that the constitutional amendment granting the right of suffrage to women must go to a vote of the people on a separate ballot, and that all other amendments to be voted on at the November election must be placed on the general ballot below the names of the candidates. The ruling is based on chapters 633 and 665, laws of 1911.

Archaeologists Returning.

Several of the parties which the Wisconsin Archaeological society has had in the field in connection with the state survey have now returned. In the course of their journey of nearly 200 miles they succeeded in locating many groups and solitary Indian earthworks and sites of early camps, workshops, caches and other features of which there had been no previous state record. Excellent photographs of many of these were obtained.

New Incorporations.

Articles of incorporation were filed as follows: The Milwaukee Heat Generator company, Milwaukee; capital, $10,000; incorporators, Hubert Schumann, Andrew Andris and John Schelber. The Powers Lake Yacht club, Powers Lake, Kenosha county; no capital; incorporators, O. H. Tuttle, C. E. Jones, Walter J. Lueders, Theodore W. Bunte and Charles F. L. Richter. The Oconto Falls Motor Car company, Oconto Falls; capital, $5,000; incorporators, J. H. Delbridge, W. J. Munsert and C. W. Carlson.

Milwaukee to Get Home for Animals.

At the recent meeting of the Wisconsin Humane society a resolution was adopted for the society to take immediate action toward establishing a home for unfortunate animals in Milwaukee. Mr. Philips' suggestion for having an exhibit at the state fair next month met with the approval of all.

E. B. Helmstreet of Palmyra, one of the directors of the society, in bringing up the matter of a home, suggested that Milwaukee be the location, for he understood that there were many willing to help financially such an institution. He also offered a resolution requesting the use of the state fair grounds, when not in use, for one year. H. K. Curtis seconded the motion and was followed by John Le Feber, who gave a short talk. Miss Lenora Cawker said that it was something that she had looked forward to for years, as she had now in her kennels more than forty cats and dogs which had been brought in during the week. Short talks also were given by Woods Plankinton, J. H. Kopmeier, J. F. Kraft, Frank Cannon, E. T. Fairchild, H. E. Philips and Miss Marshall.

In a unanimous vote it was decided to name the proposed institution the Cawker Memorial Home for Animals, and the matter was placed in the hands of the following committee: E. B. Helmstreet, chairman; Frank Cannon, E. T. Fairchild, H. L. Philips and Miss Lenore Cawker.

Names Fair Livestock Judges.

Horses and beef cattle, O. J. Delwiche, Madison; all classes, J. G. Fuller, Madison; sheep and swine, Frank Kleinheinz, Madison; all classes, W. E. Markey, A. C. Oosterhuis, J. L. Tormey, Madison; dairy cattle and swine, A. G. Austin, Janesville; swine, J. H. Accola, Sauk City; dairy cattle, Robert S. Baird, Waukesha, and P. Banker, Fort Atkinson; cattle and swine, George Beirne, Oakfield; horses, J. G. Boyd, Milwaukee; B. A. Booth, Cuba City; W. K. Caldwell, Morrisonville; all classes, George Dacy, Woodstock, Ill.; F. E. Ebert, Tomah; horses and dairy cattle, H. P. Giddings, Sheboygan Falls; horses and beef cattle, E. Hughes, Rewey; R. A. Janes, Mineral Point; Charles Keyes, Richland Center; R. A. Kolb, Manitowoc; A. H. Kuhlman, Lowell; Peter Lee, Deerfield; dairy cattle and horses, G. A. Linton, Fort Atkinson.

"Bull Moose" Plans State Convention.

This was decided at a conference of the leaders held in Milwaukee. About twenty-five were present at the conference, nearly all being from Milwaukee. Norman L. Baker, chairman of the state committee, presided.

The exact date for the state convention was left open, though it was understood that it would probably be Wednesday, September 13, during the week of the state fair. It was held that the fair would bring in thousands of persons from the state, and as Wednesday was always made state day that no better time could be named for the state convention.

The call for the convention will be issued within a few days by Chairman Baker, it is said. It will be accompanied by an address to the voters, setting forth the reasons for a "Bull Moose" party. As soon as the address is drafted the call will be issued.

Appoint Game Wardens.

Twenty-two 90-day appointments as deputy game wardens to serve during the fall hunting season were made by the state department, as follows: B. J. Shaver, Superior; B. A. Dunseth, Ingram; Peter Smonjesky, Green Bay; William F. Tonne, Shawano; J. L. Faber, Spring Valley; A. F. Peterson, Stockholm; C. M. Clark, Stoughton; S. J. Williams, Merrill; Edward Handley, Hackley; S. L. Novee, La Crosse; J. B. Buseh, Madison; John Egan, Cleveland; George A. Willard, Bagley; G. A. Miller, Boscobel; George DeKoeyer, Baraboo; Alfred G. Becker, Allentown; William H. Davis, Pardee; S. M. Sayner, Sayner; L. E. Schreiter, Darlington; C. A. Follett, Oshkosh; J. V. Kelsey, Stevens Point; J. M. Lowe, Bancroft.

Try to Avoid Car Shortage.

Wisconsin and other northwestern states face a car shortage unparalleled since 1907. Traffic managers of leading western railroads, co-operating with the Association of Western Railways, are writing letters to shippers forecasting a scarcity of rolling stock within the next thirty days unless all interests co-operate for the prompt handling of shipments. Following this advice, the Wisconsin railroad commission is notifying leading manufacturers of the impending danger. It recommends that orders for future shipments be placed as soon as possible and that every effort be made to load and unload equipment so that there may be no delay in holding cars.

Motorcycle Race Feature.

Interest in the motorcycle races to be held at the state fair is far exceeding all expectations. Inquiries are received from speed "bike" riders from all parts of the country, and the card is certain to be well filled.

Indications are that in the future the motorcycle program will be a regular feature of the state fair speed card and not be considered as a specialty. Public interest alone is working the transformation and the board of agriculture has observed the "writing on the wall."

Orders to the Railroads.

The railroad commission issued an order requiring the Sheboygan Railway and Electric company to maintain an automatic alarm bell with an illuminated sign for night indication at the Green Bay road crossing in Sheboygan Falls. It ordered the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad company to maintain a similar alarm and sign at Reeson's crossing, two and one-half miles west of its station at Dodgeville. It ordered the Milwaukee road to keep a flagman at the Spring street crossing in Beaver Dam.

Award Coal Contracts.

The state board of control has awarded the contracts for the winter's supply of coal. In all, 40,000 tons of soft coal was purchased, the prices ranging from $2.75 to $3.90 a ton. The contracts provide an expenditure of $125,000.

A contract was awarded to the W. A. Bower Heating company, Milwaukee, to install three boilers at the industrial school for boys at Waukesha. Bond & Abraham, Milwaukee, were awarded a contract for resetting the boilers at hospital in Oshkosh.

A SUMMER AT THE SEABREEZE HOTEL

By HELEN ROSS.

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

"Young lady of refinement and culture desired as piano soloist at the Seabreeze hotel, Seabreeze, N. J. Board and room free. Liberal compensation. References desired," she read aloud.

"It's much better than trying to farm on land which will only raise rocks," she mused, "and as a chickeness, Maudie, you are not a howling success. I'll ask Jimmy Brooks to take charge of the place this summer. Then if the superaristocratic Seabreeze hotel will have me, I'll sally forth to make use of my one talent."

The details attended to, and references given, Maude hurried the letter to the postoffice before there was time or opportunity for a change of mind. As luck would have it, the Seabreeze hotel did want her, for in less than a month, she was journeying towards the fashionable summer resort. All that the management had claimed for the position proved true. It was a desirable one. Accustomed as she had been in former happier years to an assured social position, Maude felt the change keenly at first. Soon, however, her common sense triumphed, and she settled down to her really pleasant duties with a will.

People came and went in one continual stream. Occasionally some kindred spirit, struck by the real sparkle and ability of Maud's playing, struck up a superficial acquaintance, but for the most part, for all the attention shown her, she might as well have been in Jericho.

Always a keen observer of human nature, the great hotel offered a rich field for observation. Gradually the humor of the situation struck her and she noticed many amusing details. Petty jealousies, hypocritical actions, heartburns, and aimless flirtations passed before her eyes in a never-ending procession. Then, too, the library was exceptionally good and much of her leisure was spent perusing its fascinating contents. As usual, at a summer resort, men were more or less rare. A male arrival was pounced upon eagerly, especially if he were inclined to be generous with the coin of the realm. To an onlooker the strivings and smallnesses were entertaining.

Several weeks after her arrival she noticed a stranger among the guests, an intellectual-looking, rather shabby young man. Maud reasoned that he must be most obscure since his presence caused not the slightest ripple in the sea of feminine hearts. He was completely ignored.

One evening at dinner, Maud, accompanied by the orchestra, played a number of East Indian melodies. As she stepped from the platform she noticed that the strange young man was regarding her fixedly, his handsome gray eyes filled with dreamy contentment.

She went to the library, selected a book and settled down to an evening of quiet enjoyment. Suddenly she was aroused by a voice besides her. It was the shabby young man.

"Miss Gault, I wish to thank you for the pleasure your music has given me," he said in pleasant, well-bred accents.

Soon they were in an animated discussion of music and literature. The stranger was not only a gentleman, but a man of extreme culture as well.

The young man smiled. "Because I was not invited. I can not afford to indulge in expensive summer pastimes. Consequently the girls have no time for me. Anyhow, why should I care when the very prettiest girl in the hotel is right here?"

Maud blushed and smiled, but as it was plain that he was sincere in his opinion, she allowed it to pass. Their talk drifted to lighter subjects, and before long the evening was over. The young man's name was James Clifford, and he was an author, he said.

A friendship sprang up between them which proved a source of great pleasure. Maud tactfully declined Mr. Clifford's simple invitations, vowing that she preferred the beach to all indoor amusements. The real reason was that she knew he was poor and could not afford even a slight sum.

One day they were sitting on the beach chatting when two fashionably dressed girls settled down near them. The hat of one blew off and she jumped to her feet in pursuit. It landed at Maud's feet, and as she arose to return it, she and the owner came face to face. The girl laughed harshly, caught up the hat, and without a word of thanks, went back to her companion.

"That's the gifted Miss Gault who pounds the piano at the Seabreeze, with some obscure nobody. We really must go over there some night and listen to the cat concert," she observed sarcastically.

Mr. Clifford glanced at Maud. He knew that she must have heard, yet her expression was one of utter indifference.

"I'm so sorry, Miss Gault," he said.

"It really doesn't matter, I assure you," returned Maud. "Her father is the most corrupt politician in our state. My father, when governor, fought him and his interests for years. He ruined dad at last. Poor man, he died penniless. All he was able to leave me was a stony bit of farmland, while this man Warsh and his daughter are rolling in wealth. No wonder she is bitter—their money never procured a social position for her."

The young man exclaimed in surprise: "Why, you must be Governor Gault's daughter! I admired him more than any man in public life. It is an honor to meet his daughter. He put up a brave fight to protect his state from Warsh, and it will be remembered by the people for many a long day."

They shook hands and straightway forgot all about the incident in discussing the estimable qualities of the late governor.

Mr. Clifford stayed all summer, and before October came he and Maud were engaged to be married.

"I will not always be poor, nor will my wife ever repent her choice," he assured her.

Maud glanced at him proudly. In spite of his unfashionable garments, Mr. Clifford's bearing and appearance was that of a man who is bound to meet with success.

"As though that makes any difference," she whispered.

Summer drifted into autumn, and gradually the merry guests were departing to their homes. For Maud and Mr. Clifford those days were cloudless. Miss Warsh kept her word, and more than once Maud discerned her mocking face among the diners. One evening her harsh tones were audible all over the dining room as she rustled into it.

"Oh, girls, Robert Merrell just arrived. He came in the most stunning motor imaginable. I saw him when I entered the hotel a minute ago. He's at the desk now signing the register."

Breathless excitement followed this announcement. Robert Merrill was one of America's foremost capitalists. Maud sat on the little pattern privately speculating as to the appearance of the famous man. When it was time for her solo, she straightway forgot all about him.

Suddenly she was conscious of a buzz of conversation, which died down to an expectant pause. She glanced up and saw two gentlemen enter the dining room. The elder she recognized at once as Robert Merrell. He was conversing with a companion in an affectionate, interested manner. And the other man was John Clifford!

It was fortunate for Maud that her solo ended just then, for she saw her fiance and Mr. Merrell coming towards her.

"This is my future wife," announced Mr. Clifford proudly.

"I am most happy to meet you, my dear," he said simply. "For years this absurd boy of mine has been afraid that his wealth would influence a girl in his favor. I have always wished him to marry young. Also, I am pleased to have him love Gault's girl."

"His wealth?" stammered Maud.

Merrell looked from her to Clifford in surprise.

"I've never told her, father," the young man observed. Turning to Maud he added, "James Clifford is my pen-name. I am writing a book on 'The Worth of Social Position.' As James Merrell I am received with open arms. As James Clifford, to quote Miss Warsh, I am an obscure nobody. It has been an interesting experiment. I took the liberty of asking the hotel people to release you for the short time which remains of the season, and tomorrow we will be married. This is why my father is here. I own this hotel. Come now, dear, we will all dine together."

The trio passed on to a table, oblivious of the frantic curiosity—in fact oblivious to everything but their own happiness. So Miss Warsh's bitter remark "that the sly minx knew it all along," dissolved into the rosy hue of contentment which surrounded them.

Preponderance of Women.

Of recent years the custom of making a systematic census of the population has become well established throughout all civilized countries, and it is now possible to gain a fairly accurate idea of conditions all the world over. Some of the figures now cited in regard to this matter are interesting. The world's total population is estimated at 1,700 millions, out of which the proportion of the sexes is known for 1,038,000,000, the ratio being 1,000 males to 990 females. The ratio varies very considerably in different places. In Europe there were, for every 1,000 men, 1,027 women; Africa, 1,045; America, 964; Asia, 961; Australia, 937. The maximum proportion of women is found in Uganda, 1,467; the minimum in the Alaska gold fields and the Malay States, with 391 and 389 respectively.

Thinking of the Singers.

"Do you care for Esperanto?" he asked the sweet young thing as they were demolishing plates of cream after the opera.

Scientific Attainment.

The porcus lead of Prof. H. T. Hanover of the Danish Polytechnic high school of Copenhagen, is said to be the result of many years of study of the problem of accumulator efficiency. The lead is filled with cavities so small as to be visible only through a powerful microscope, but they diminish weight, and they add so much to the surface that it is said storage batteries have their capacity increased five times without addition to their size or weight.

Floating Baths Condemned.

Floating baths near great cities are now condemned by sanitary authorities. The vast quantities of sewage that are discharged into the waters that usually border such cities are thought to be productive of disease to bathers, and certainly render their ablutions of doubtful value as a cleansing agency.

Curing Macaroni.

WILLING HE SHOULD GO FAR

One Man to Have Kid Transferred, but He May Have Had a Grouch.

"What do you think of this scheme of having the countries exchange children?" asked the Sewickley man.

"I don't think anything about it," said the Wilkinsburg man. "What is the idea?"

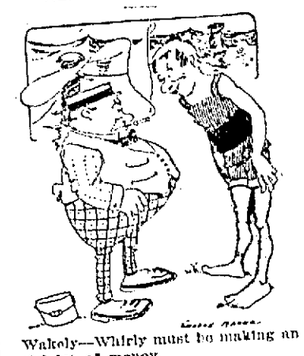

"An English family, for instance, exchanges children for a couple of years with a German family. References are first exchanged and all that sort of thing."

"I see."

"Thus both sets of children get a chance to learn another language and get acquainted with another country. It's quite a scheme."

"It's an elegant scheme," declared the Wilkinsburg man. "My neighbors have a kid that I would like to see exchanged with some family in Siberia."

ALMOST INCREDIBLE.

Wakely—Whirly must be making an awful lot of money.

Wisely—I should say he is. I actually believe he is making more than his wife can spend.

Carrying It Too Far.

"Scientific management, like any other good thing, may be carried to excess."

"We scientific managers mustn't go as far as Hussler went.

"Hussler was the proprietor of a tremendous factory where scientific management had reduced the motions of every hand from 800 to 17. Hussler attended a very fashionable wedding one day, a wedding where the ceremony was performed by a bishop, assisted by a dean and a canon, and in the most impressive part of the writ Hussler, overcome by his scientific management ideas, rushed up to the altar and pushed the bishop and canon rudely back.

Case of Mistaken Identity.

President Taft was out for his afternoon walk in Washington one day when a flaxen-haired little girl ran out in front of him, held up her finger, and exclaimed, in a shrill voice:

"I know who you are!"

The president, thinking it not at all unusual that she should possess this information, but willing to gratify her, asked:

"Well, who am I?"

Wise Doctor Gives Postum to Convalescents.

A wise doctor tries to give nature its best chance by saving the little strength of the already exhausted patient, and building up wasted energy with simple but powerful nourishment.

"Five years ago," writes a doctor "I commenced to use Postum in my own family instead of coffee." (It's a well-known fact that tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.) "I was so well pleased with the results that I had two grocers place it in stock, guaranteeing its sale.

"I then commenced to recommend it to my patients in place of coffee, as a nutritious beverage. The consequence is, every store in town is now selling it, as it has become a household necessity in many homes.

"I'm sure I prescribe Postum as often as any one remedy in the Materia Medica—in almost every case of indigestion and nervousness I treat, and with the best results.

"When I once introduce it into a family, it is quite sure to remain. I shall continue to use it and prescribe it in families where I practice.

"In convalescence from pneumonia, typhoid fever and other cases I give it as a liquid, easily absorbed diet. You may use my letter as a reference any way you see fit." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Mother's Lingual Attainment.

The mother of a little boy in Kansas City, Kan., recites negro dialect stories charmingly. Her small son is quite proud of her accomplishment and frequently boasts of it. One day recently, when some of his playmates were vaunting the achievements of their several mothers, the little boy braggingly remarked:

"My mother is smarter than any of yours; she can talk two languages"

"What are they?" demanded his companions

"White and colored."

Child's Fear of the Dark.

If mothers notice that the brains of their little ones conjure up uncanny sights and thoughts from the shadows of a room more or less dark, let the light burn brightly. To force a child to become accustomed to the darkness is a grave error, if its nervous system is so organized that this forcing is productive of a fright

The nervous system of a child is a very susceptible organization and the deleterious impressions made upon it will often make their influence felt throughout its whole after life. If the child asks for a light under such circumstances do not refuse it.

The Other Way 'Round.

A good little story, long current in England, is just now gaining American circulation It has for leading characters Rudyard Kipling and Dorothy Drew, Mr. Gladstone's little grandchild. Kipling was visiting Hawarden, and, being fond of children, devoted himself to little Miss Dorothy until her anxious mother expressed the hope that the child had not been wearying the great author.

"Oh, no, mamma," spoke up Dorothy, before any one else had a chance to say anything, "but you have no idea how Mr. Kipling has been wearying me!"

Got His Answer.

When Oscar Wilde came to the United States to lecture on aesthetics in his highly aesthetic velvet costume—and incidentally to prepare the public mind for the proper appreciation of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Patience," in which the aesthetic movement was held up to ridicule—he used to complain that America was very uninteresting since it had "no antiquities and no curiosities." But he ventured on this disparagement once too often, for in the course of his travels he uttered it to the American Girl, and she replied with the demure depravity of candid innocence that this was not quite a fair reproach, since "we shall have the antiquities in time, and we are already importing the curiosities"

FEW RECRUITS FOR LIFE-SAVERS

THE United States life-saving service is finding it increasingly difficult to fill gaps in its crews caused by death and resignation. The younger men of the coast do not seem as willing to accept the small salary and great dangers of the service as were their forefathers It is still possible to find father and son serving in the same crew, and there are Long Island families that can boast of having every male member a coast guard, but these instances are by no means as frequent as they used to be The surfmen are beginning to doubt the value of a service that pays, at most, a salary of $1,104 a year, with no prospect of pension or indemnification if a man dies in the performance of his duty Why should a man adopt such a life when he can do better and live safely as fisherman or oysterman, or combination carpenter and yacht-skipper in the summer months? Why, indeed?

Along the 10,000 miles of coast line there is no stretch that is so uniformly dangerous as the tenuous sand spit that runs along the south side of Long Island projecting 120 miles into the Atlantic The Great South beach, it is called, or Fire Island beach; but to men of the sea it is known as "the Graveyard of the Atlantic" because of the ships that have broken their backs on the shifting bars that dot its length.

Since the white man first sailed these seas, the Great South beach has taken its toll Bluff-bowed Dutchmen out of Rotterdam; Spanish galleons from Cuba, high-pooped English merchantmen that traded to the loyal colony of New York; king's ships and fishing boats of the old days, stout clippers and ocean liners—all these and many more have driven in with the flying scud, setting their stems deep in the clinging sand that has so seldom let loose its prey.

You find evidences of them in the shattered timbers that line the beach from Fire Island to the Hamptons and beyond—stout spars, sections of planking, water-soaked timbers of many shapes and ages; and off-shore, sometimes one catches a glimpse of a shattered hull, draped with the green seaweed or a sunken mass of engines and boilers and twisted pipes

The government long ago recognized the peculiar dangers of the Long Island shore, with its menace to the liners that ply between New York and European ports, and measures to safeguard it were taken. At intervals of five miles along the most dangerous section, tiny stations are planted. There are 13 of them, each manned by eight men from the first of August to the first of June Between these dates all the crews, except captains or keepers, go off duty—without pay. These are are stations at New York's door They are also the stations which do the greatest amount of work and bear the heaviest responsibility—a statement that casts no reflection on the remainder of the 300 stations.

Some of the men in these stations have performed noteworthy deeds of valor, but the most they have ever received in recognition has been a few medals, and in one instance the thanks of the New York legislature Despite the undoubted hardship of their work, and the fact that they are called upon to risk their lives more often than soldiers or sailors, or even firemen probably, the government has not seen fit to raise their pay or increase the comforts of their surroundings One wonders how long such an attitude will be preserved. It seems unfair and unwise, inasmuch as it has already begun to react by curtailing the supply of recruits

It should be borne in mind that in all the history of the life-saving service there has never been an instance of cowardice—not once There has never been a time when a captain had any difficulty in getting his men to follow him into the surf. There has never been a time when it was necessary for the captain to repeat an order. Now and then, men have been known to drink and neglect patrol duty, but even these have never showed themselves to be cowards. And perhaps, after all, that is the thing the service is most proud of.

"Yes, they do say it's a hard life," said old Capt George Goddard of Lone Hill, when some one once asked him why he still stuck to his job at seventy "Yes, it may be a hard life," he mused "But I like it. Thirty-odd years I've been on the beach, for I was a middle-aged man when I joined the service. But I'm good for a spell yet, and then I've laid aside a little, so's I can live comfortable. They don't give us a pension, you know"

This last was not a complaint, but a fact. It was spoken, too, by a man who had reached three-score years and ten and who was still able to stand up in the stern of a big surfboat and handle a kicking steering-oar, with the seas piling in higher every minute and the North German Lloyd liner Prinzess Irene fast on the outer bar. His tones expressed a certain amount of surprise, but no complaint. In fact, no member of the service complains about his lot, even when he resigns.

A man went to the captain of his crew not long ago—last summer, to be exact—and remarked: "I'm goin' to quit, Cap Too much work feedin' the folks home, now we've got another baby"

The captain took his pipe out of his mouth and grunted That was all. He knew perfectly well, as well as the man in front of him, that with a family of young children to be brought up and educated in these days of expensive living it was impossible to get along on the coast guard's pay of $65 a month and $9 extra for rations

If the coast guards are somewhat rough and uncouth outwardly, they are as gentle and courteous as women. The visitor will find nothing too good for him When you sit down to eat with them you are expected to forage for yourself They take it for granted that every one does that at any table Every man knows how to reach for the condensed milk can, according to the coast guard's viewpoint. But if they once get it into their heads that a visitor is not faring properly they will make amends. Any stranger who goes to a life-saving station and appears to be a decent citizen can have board and lodging and he isn't asked to pay, either. That part of the bargain is left to himself. Even if he does pay he won't be allowed to tax himself more than the cost price of everything. This is not said unknowingly; it is a fact. The life-savers of the Long Island coast have a code of hospitality as rigid as the American Indians.

They are of the purest American stock, often with a strong vein of old Dutch blood from the colony at West Sayville. In most cases they have followed the sea from father to son for from four to six generations. One is almost inclined to believe that they are born leather-skinned and able to pull the heavy fourteen-foot ash sweeps that row the surfboats and "self-bailers." Some of the Long Island fishing families have established enviable reputations for themselves in the service. Take the Rhodes family, the Bakers, the Reynoldses, the Raynors, the Seamans and many others. They have all furnished at least one hero.

Captain Baker of the Point o' Woods station has two sons in the service. The oldest, Eddy, is No. 1 man at Point o' Woods; the second, Wally, is at Blue Point, and the youngest, Simmy, is already on the eligible list for appointment at Lone Hill. They are fine, husky, strapping boys, the best type of young Americans of their class and calling—broad-shouldered, strong-limbed, with deep chests that have been developed by hours of tugging at oars that had to meet the undertow and bite of the surf In a way one is sorry to see material like this wasted on the sea. But there is another side to the story. Is it wasted, after all? These youngsters lead courageous, healthful lives, out in the open air The city means nothing to them.

Eddy Baker, who bossed the job in his father's absence when the Antonio Lopez came ashore near Point o' Woods two summers ago, and went out to her with a scratch crew of cottagers and bay men, was once invited to spend a week in town with some of these same cottagers, who had taken a fancy to his strong, simple nature He was so dismayed by the confusion of civilization that he lost himself at four tugs had unexpectedly dislodged her from the sand bar:

"I'd like to be aboard her," said a man, wistfully, as he thought of the long trip back to the city by boat and train

"Why?" asked young Baker. "To go to New York? Shucks! What do you want to go there for?"

Some of the Lone Hill surfmen had been standing around when Baker made this remark and, afterward, in the messroom of their station, just after supper, and the "sunset" patrol had started out, the subject was brought up again. They were mildly amused by their visitor's inclination to return to New York and, finally, Jim Reynolds, who, as he said himself, had had more schooling than the rest, was induced to frame the philosophy of his mates in concrete phrases

"You see, down here, we've got the clean sea and the wind," he said "Everybody knows everybody else. And the everybodies aren't so thick that we can't have lots of space and air and sunshine on all four sides of us, outdoors and in. Nobody down here is after your money. I don't need to knock the city. But down here they like you for yourself. Eddy Baker's right. I can't see how anybody likes to live in the city. Why, think of the breakers and the fights we have with them. Do you have anything like that in the city? No, sir; I guess not."

The fact is, these men do not mind the dangers and privations they undergo They are nerveless, or practically so. They are not wholly ignorant of fear, they realize it in graduated degrees. Men like Captain Goddard of Lone Hill or the Bakers of Point o' Woods have reduced the apprehension of danger to a minimum. Although, it should be said, even Captain Goddard, stanch old veteran that he is, has been known to break down and cry.

For the Sake of Novelty

Small Girl's Excellent Reasons for Wishing She Might Be a Hen, If Only on Occasional Sunday.

Out back of the house, on a grassy bank overlooking the chicken yard, sat Miss Thung and Margaret last Sunday. They were absorbed, especially Margaret, in watching the chickens.

"Oh, no, it isn't wicked," objected Miss Thung.

"My mother says that 'musment on Sunday is bad for the soul," remarked Margaret. "But chickens are not like little boys and girls, are they?" she questioned with a baby sigh.

"No, they are quite different."

"They haven't got a soul, have they?" pursued the child.

"No."

Margaret paused long and reflectively. "I wish I was a hen," she said at last with decision.

"But don't you like to be mamma's dear little girl?" inquired Miss Thung in surprise.

"Oh, yes, I 'spose so," replied Margaret. "But," she concluded wistfully, "I think I should like to try being a hen for a while"

Comfort in Shedding Tears

Provision of Nature to Bring Relief at Times of Mental Emotion or Great Pain.

While tears do not always express grief they certainly betray intense mental emotion of some kind, and relief is always obtained by the shedding of tears, whether the person be old or young.

Severe pain and suffering physically seldom calls for tears, except in young children, and then we are told that it is fear rather than pain which causes the crying at such a time.

Do not attempt to stop a child's crying if it gets hurt or is afraid of anything; reason with him, but remember that tears were provided by nature to relieve the mind of the strain of an emotion too great for endurance. After a good cry the child will soon forget the fright or sorrow that caused it to shed tears, and this in itself proves the relief it has brought to the mind.

The ancients prayed "Grant us the balm of tears!" They realized the philosophy of natural expression in time of great sorrow; and the repression of one's grief may lead to serious results later on, especially in cases where the person is of a nervous temperament. Pent up emotion gathers unto itself much power; it is far better to express a little as we go along.

People who exert great control over their feelings do not always prove to the world that they are superior—in fact, it has always seemed to me that the man or woman who expresses no grief does not feel any. Watch this same person under conditions of what, apparently, ought to bring great joy; do they rejoice? No, they do not; they are just as silent in the face of good news as they were in the home of sorrow. Still waters may run deep, but the depths of a human soul that is worth anything to its fellow men does not go too deep that sorrow cannot "sound the depths!"

OBSERVING LAWS OF HEALTH

The influence of excessive heat on human beings is amply demonstrated when the country is visited by extraordinary hot waves. In legislative and other deliberative bodies it leads to loss of temper and frequently to the passing of the lie. Individuals who are ordinarily even-tempered suddenly become morose or violent. The occupants of public conveyances are snappy in conversation and cross. There are also more suicides in warm weather than in cold. Deeds of violence and strikes predominate in the heated term.

Most of these deplorable conditions are brought about by the ragged state of the nerves, and by loss of sleep. The disgruntled are run down in health. Many also are overtaxing their strength and consequently become nervous wrecks. Overindulgence in smoking and drinking when the thermometer registers over 90 degrees causes faint action of the heart and dizzy spells follow.

The wise man or woman, knowing how the hot weather can disturb their health and nerves, study how to keep from a break-down. They control their eating, drinking and exercise, and keep within such limitations that they can pass through trying days of heat and discomfort with the least possible expenditure of vitality. They determine not to wory and to observe the laws governing health. Those who ignore these laws must pay a severe penalty.

Thoughtless Query.

"Have you ever been married before?" asked the license clerk.

REPORTED BY THE GROUCH

Here the Original Hiram J. Tells of His Attendance at a Country "Function."

"Having nothing else to do," remarked the old codger, "I attended a function while I was over at Torpidville the other day. The affair was held in a dispirited grove at the end of a road in which every time a horse popped down his foot the dust shot up in the air like a skyrocket. A band was playing without the slightest remorse. A statesman, with a neck as wrinkled as a pickle, droned forth redundant nonentities without end. A sad and rickety merry-go-wabble wound 'round and 'round to the sound of its own plaintive poodle-doodle In a tipsy pavilion a hoarse person was endeavoring to sell, in brazen defiance of the pure food and drug act, what looked alarmingly like horned toads fried in axle-grease A gentleman in a striped tent near by hoarsely stated that he preferred to eat snakes at ten cents per serpent There was the usual balloon which seemed perfectly willing to do anything but go up Scattered around through the festal scene were a few old soldiers, grumbling, a smattering of farmers, also grumbling; sundry honest voters, likewise grumbling; and various other folks, nothing about whom is worth mentioning except that they, too, were grumbling. It may have been a reunion, a fair, a rally, a picnic, or what-not; but whatever they chanced to call it, 'twas an excellent example of one of our most cherished institutions."—Kansas City Star.

CHILD'S FACE ALL RED SPOTS

632 N. 5th St., Terre Haute, Ind.—"My little nephew, a boy of four years, had a breaking out on his face. It was little red spots at first, then he would rub and scratch and water blisters would form, and wherever the water would run another would come until his face was covered with them He would cry and fret. His mother got some medicine, but it did not do any good. He would scream and cry and say it hurt. We hardly know him, his little face was all red spots and blisters. So I begged him to let me put some Cuticura Ointment on them The next morning I made a strong soap suds with Cuticura Soap and washed his face in the warm suds The little blisters burst by pressing the cloth on them. After I had his face washed, I put the Cuticura Ointment on and in a short time his little face was all red and dry. I kept using the Cuticura Soap and putting on the Cuticura Ointment and his face got as well and it did not leave a scar. He was entirely cured in about one week and a half" (Signed) Mrs. Arthur Haworth, Jan. 10, 1912.

To the mother's surprise, they returned vigorously chewing gum. As they had no money, she asked them where they got it.

"Oh," explained the older one, "it said on the slot machine, 'Ask the agent for pennies,' so we did."

Really Had Best of It

John Burroughs is well known as one of the foremost of nature writers in this country Some time ago he visited his brother, Eden Burroughs, who lives in the Catskills, at a place called Hobart The two brothers went fox hunting together. The honor of the hunt came to Eden, who shot the only fox It so happened that fox skins were worth five dollars at that time, and the successful Nimrod took much pride in telling how he got the better of the siege of Slabsides Later, in boasting to a few friends about it in the presence of his brother, John, he was interrupted by, "You have bragged about that fox hunt long enough. You shot the fox, sold the skin and got five dollars I wrote a little account of the hunt, and got $75 from the magazine which published it So there you are!"

Matter of Justice.

Where shall justice begin, with those who have power or with those who suffer wrong" If exact and ideal justice were done, the weak would make an effort to give to the strong all that is their due, and the strong would try to put their affairs in order so that no just cause of complaint should exist anywhere. The unhappy element in the relations of the strong and the weak is that both are thinking too much about exacting justice and not enough about doing that which is just and right. "Pay what thou owest" is the cry most often heard. 'Give me that which is my due, then I will pay you what I owe" —The Christian Register.

MOTHER OF LARGE FAMILY

Tells How She Keeps Her Health—Happiness For Those Who Take Her Advice.

Scottville, Mich.—"I want to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash have done me. I live on a farm and have worked very hard. I am forty-five years old, and am the mother of thirteen children. Many people think it strange that I am not broken down with hard work and the care of my family, but I tell them of my good friend, Lydia E. HARD FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

It's hard enough to keep house if in perfect health, but a woman who is weak, tired and suffering all of the time with an aching back has a heavy burden to carry. Any woman in this condition has good cause to suspect kidney trouble, especially if the kidney action seems disordered at all. Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of women suffering in this way. It is the best-recommended special kidney remedy.

A NEBRASKA CASE:

Mrs. Mary H. Hixler, Gordon, Neb., says: "I had sharp darting pains all through my body and if I sat down my back became so lame I had to grasp some think for support. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me entirely and improved my condition in every way."

Hurry, Girls!

Autocratic Assertions.

"Are you a servant of the people?" asked the constituent.

"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum. "Only it should be observed that a really first-class servant may come pretty nearly being a boss."

Job Not Satisfactory.

"I'm a self-made man," said the proud individual.

"Well, you are all right except as to your head," commented the listener.

"How's that?"

Mother's Lingual Attainment.

The mother of a little boy in Kansas City, Kan., recites negro dialect stories charmingly. Her small son is quite proud of her accomplishment and frequently boasts of it. One day recently, when some of his playmates were vaunting the achievements of their several mothers, the little boy braggingly remarked:

"My mother is smarter than any of yours; she can talk two languages."

"What are they?" demanded his companions.

"White and colored."

Child's Fear of the Dark.

If mothers notice that the brains of their little ones conjure up uncanny sights and thoughts from the shadows of a room more or less dark, let the light burn brightly. To force a child to become accustomed to the darkness is a grave error, if its nervous system is so organized that this forcing is productive of a fright.

The nervous system of a child is a very susceptible organization and the deleterious impressions made upon it will often make their influence felt throughout its whole after life. If the child asks for a light under such circumstances do not refuse it.

The Other Way 'Round.

A good little story, long current in England, is just now gaining American circulation. It has for leading characters Rudyard Kipling and Dorothy Drew, Mr. Gladstone's little grandchild. Kipling was visiting Hawarden, and, being fond of children, devoted himself to little Miss Dorothy until her anxious mother expressed the hope that the child had not been wearying the great author.

"Oh, no, mamma," spoke up Dorothy, before any one else had a chance to say anything, "but you have no idea how Mr. Kipling has been wearying me!"

Got His Answer.

When Oscar Wilde came to the United States to lecture on aesthetics in his highly aesthetic velvet costume—and incidentally to prepare the public mind for the proper appreciation of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Patience," in which the aesthetic movement was held up to ridicule—he used to complain that America was very uninteresting since it had "no antiquities and no curiosities." But he ventured on this disparagement once too often, for in the course of his travels he uttered it to the American Girl, and she replied with the demure depravity of candid innocence that this was not quite a fair reproach, since "we shall have the antiquities in time, and we are already importing the curiosities."

FEW RECRUITS FOR LIFE-SAVERS

THE United States life-saving service is finding it increasingly difficult to fill gaps in its crews caused by death and resignation. The younger men of the coast do not seem as willing to accept the small salary and great dangers of the service as were their forefathers. It is still possible to find father and son serving in the same crew, and there are Long Island families that can boast of having every male member a coast guard; but these instances are by no means as frequent as they used to be. The surfmen are beginning to doubt the value of a service that pays, at most, a salary of $1,104 a year, with no prospect of pension or indemnification if a man dies in the performance of his duty. Why should a man adopt such a life when he can do better and live safely as fisherman or oysterman, or combination carpenter and yacht-skipper in the summer months? Why, indeed?

Along the 10,000 miles of coast line there is no stretch that is so uniformly dangerous as the tenuous sand spit that runs along the south side of Long Island, projecting 120 miles into the Atlantic. The Great South beach, it is called, or Fire Island beach; but to men of the sea it is known as "the Graveyard of the Atlantic" because of the ships that have broken their backs on the shifting bars that dot its length.

Since the white man first sailed these seas, the Great South beach has taken its toll. Bluff-bowed Dutchmen out of Rotterdam; Spanish galleons from Cuba; high-pooped English merchantmen that traded to the loyal colony of New York; king's ships and fighting boats of the old days; stout clippers and ocean liners—all these and many more have driven in with the flying send, setting their stems deep in the clinging sand that has so seldom let loose its prey.

You find evidences of them in the shattered timbers that line the beach from Fire Island to the Hamptons and beyond—stout spars, sections of planking, water-soaked timbers of many shapes and ages; and off-shore, sometimes one catches a glimpse of a shattered hull, draped with the green seaweed or a sunken mass of engines and boilers and twisted pipes.

The government long ago recognized the peculiar dangers of the Long Island shore, with its menace to the liners that ply between New York and European ports, and measures to safeguard it were taken. At intervals of five miles along the most dangerous section, tiny stations are planted. There are 13 of them, each manned by eight men from the first of August to the first of June. Between these dates all the crews, except captains or keepers, go off duty—without pay. These are are stations at New York's door. They are also the stations which do the greatest amount of work and bear the heaviest responsibility—a statement that casts no reflection on the remainder of the 300 stations.

Some of the men in these stations have performed noteworthy deeds of valor, but the most they have ever received in recognition has been a few medals, and in one instance the thanks of the New York legislature. Despite the undoubted hardship of their work, and the fact that they are called upon to risk their lives more often than soldiers or sailors, or even firemen probably, the government has not seen fit to raise their pay or increase the comforts of their surroundings. One wonders how long such an attitude will be preserved. It seems unfair and unwise, inasmuch as it has already begun to react by curtailing the supply of recruits.

It should be borne in mind that in all the history of the life-saving service there has never been an instance of cowardice—not once. There has never been a time when a captain had any difficulty in getting his men to follow him into the surf. There has never been a time when it was necessary for the captain to repeat an order. Now and then, men have been known to drink and neglect patrol duty, but even these have never showed themselves to be cowards. And perhaps, after all, that is the thing the service is most proud of.

"Yes, they do say it's a hard life," said old Capt. George Goddard of Long Hill, when some one once asked him why he still stuck to his job at seventy. "Yes, it may be a hard life," he mused. "But I like it. Thirty-odd years I've been on the beach, for I was a middle-aged man when I joined the service. But I'm good for a spell yet, and then I've laid aside a little, so's I can live comfortable. They don't give us a pension, you know."

This last was not a complaint, but a fact. It was spoken, too, by a man who had reached three-score years and ten and who was still able to stand up in the stern of a big surf-boat and handle a kicking steering-oar, with the seas piling in higher every minute and the North German Lloyd liner Prinzess Irene fast on the outer bar. His tones expressed a certain amount of surprise, but no complaint. In fact, no member of the service complains about his lot, even when he resigns.

A man went to the captain of his crew not long ago—last summer, to be exact—and remarked: "I'm goin' to quit, Cap. Too much work feedin' the folks home, now we've got another baby."

The captain took his pipe out of his mouth and grunted. That was all. He knew perfectly well, as well as the man in front of him, that with a family of young children to be brought up and educated in these days of expensive living, it was impossible to get along on the coast guard's pay of $65 a month and $9 extra for rations.

If the coast guards are somewhat rough and uncouth outwardly, they are as gentle and courteous as women. The visitor will find nothing too good for him. When you sit down to eat with them you are expected to forage for yourself. They take it for granted that every one does that at any table. Every man knows how to reach for the condensed milk can, according to the coast guard's viewpoint. But if they once get it into their heads that a visitor is not faring properly they will make amends. Any stranger who goes to a life-saving station and appears to be a decent citizen can have board and lodging and he isn't asked to pay, either. That part of the bargain is left to himself. Even if he does pay he won't be allowed to tax himself more than the cost price of everything. This is not said unknowingly; it is a fact. The life-savers of the Long Island coast have a code of hospitality as rigid as the American Indians.

They are of the purest American stock, often with a strong vein of old Dutch blood from the colony at West Sayville. In most cases they have followed the sea from father to son for from four to six generations. One is almost inclined to believe that they are born leather-skinned and able to pull the heavy fourteen-foot ash sweeps that row the surfboats and "self-ballers." Some of the Long Island fishing families have established enviable reputations for themselves in the service. Take the Rhodes family; the Bakers, the Reynoldses, the Raynors, the Seamans and many others. They have all furnished at least one hero.

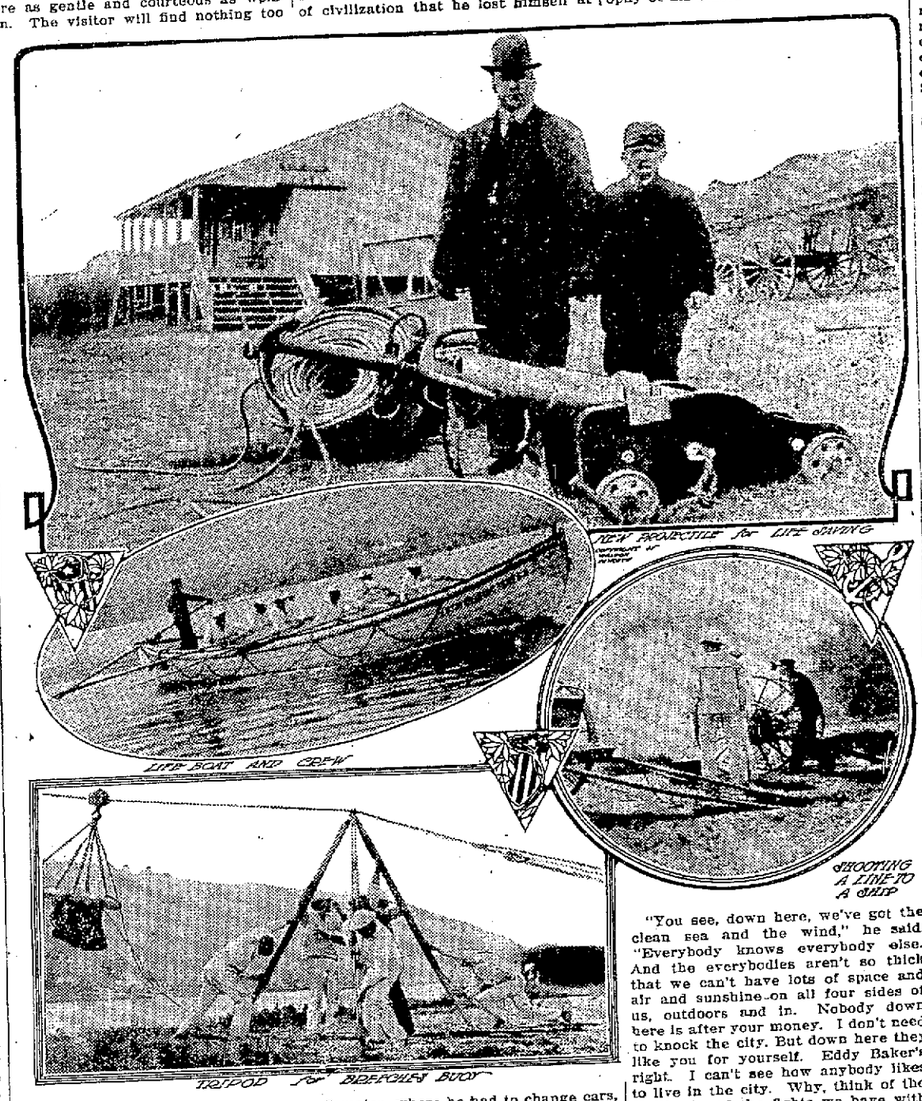

Captain Baker of the Point o' Woods station has two sons in the service. The oldest, Eddy, is No. 1 man at Point o' Woods; the second, Wally, is at Blue Point, and the youngest, Simmy, is already on the eligible list for appointment at Lone Hill. They are fine, husky, strapping boys, the best type of young Americans of their class and calling—broad-shouldered, strong-limbed, with deep chests that have been developed by hours of tugging at oars that had to meet the undertow and bite of the surf. In a way one is sorry to see material like this wasted on the sea. But there is another side to the story. Is it wasted, after all? These youngsters lead courageous, healthful lives, out in the open air. The city means nothing to them.

Eddy Baker, who bossed the job in his father's absence when the Antonio Lopez came ashore near Point o' Woods two summers ago, and went out to her with a scratch crew of cottagers and bay men, was once invited to spend a week in town with some of these same cottagers, who had taken a fancy to his strong, simple nature. He was so dismayed by the confusion of civilization that he lost himself at four tugs had unexpectedly dislodged her from the sand bar:

"I'd like to be aboard her," said a man, wistfully, as he thought of the long trip back to the city by boat and train.

"Why?" asked young Baker. "To go to New York? Shucks! What do you want to go there for?"

Some of the Lone Hill surfmen had been standing around when Baker made this remark and, afterward, in the messroom of their station, just after supper, and the "sunset" patrol had started out, the subject was brought up again. They were mildly amused by their visitor's inclination to return to New York and, finally, Jim Reynolds, who, as he said himself, had had more schooling than the rest, was induced to frame the philosophy of his mates in concrete phrases.

"You see, down here, we've got the clean sea and the wind," he said. "Everybody knows everybody else. And the everybodies aren't so thick that we can't have lots of space and air and sunshine on all four sides of us, outdoors and in. Nobody down here is after your money. I don't need to knock the city. But down here they like you for yourself. Eddy Baker's right. I can't see how anybody likes to live in the city. Why, think of the breakers and the fights we have with them. Do you have anything like that in the city? No, sir; I guess not."

The fact is, these men do not mind the dangers and privations they undergo. They are nerveless, or practically so. They are not wholly ignorant of fear; they realize it in graduated degrees. Men like Captain Goddard of Long Hill or the Bakers of Point o' Woods have reduced the apprehension of danger to a minimum. Although, it should be said, even Captain Gooddard, stanch old veteran that he is, has been known to break down and cry.

For the Sake of Novelty

Small Girl's Excellent Reasons for Wishing She Might Be a Hen, if Only on Occasional Sunday.

Out back of the house, on a grassy bank overlooking the chicken yard, sat Miss Thung and Margaret last Sunday. They were absorbed, especially Margaret, in watching the chickens.

"They scratch just the same on Sunday," observed Margaret reflectively, "as they do on weekdays. It's wicked, I 'spose."

"Oh, no, it isn't wicked," objected Miss Thung.

"My mother says that 'musment on Sunday is bad for the soul," remarked Margaret. "But chickens are not like little boys and girls, are they?" she questioned with a baby sigh.

"No, they are quite different."

"They haven't got a soul, have they?" pursued the child.

"No."

Margaret paused long and reflectively. "I wish I was a hen," she said at last with decision.

"But don't you like to be mamma's dear little girl?" inquired Miss Thung in surprise.

"Oh, yes, I 'spose so," replied Margaret. "But," she concluded wistfully, "I think I should like to try being a hen for a while."

Comfort in Shedding Tears

Provision of Nature to Bring Relief at Times of Mental Emotion or Great Pain.

While tears do not always express grief they certainly betray intense mental emotion of some kind, and relief is always obtained by the shedding of tears, whether the person be old or young.

Severe pain and suffering physically seldom calls for tears, except in young children, and then we are told that it is fear rather than pain which causes the crying at such a time.

Do not attempt to stop a child's crying if it gets hurt or is afraid of anything; reason with him, but remember that tears were provided by nature to relieve the mind of the strain of an emotion too great for endurance. After a good cry the child will soon forget the fright or sorrow that caused it to shed tears, and this in itself proves the relief it has brought to the mind.

The ancients prayed "Grant us the balm of tears!" They realized the philosophy of natural expression in time of great sorrow; and the repression of one's grief may lead to serious results later on, especially in cases where the person is of a nervous temperament. Pent up emotion gathers unto itself much power; it is far better to express a little as we go along.

People who exert great control over their feelings do not always prove to the world that they are superior—in fact, it has always seemed to me that the man or woman who expresses no grief does not feel any. Watch this same person under conditions of what, apparently, ought to bring great joy; do they rejoice? No, they do not; they are just as silent in the face of good news as they were in the home of sorrow. Still waters may run deep, but the depths of a human soul that is worth anything to its fellow men does not go too deep that sorrow cannot "sound the depths!"

OBSERVING LAWS OF HEALTH

The influence of excessive heat on human beings is amply demonstrated when the country is visited by extraordinary hot waves. In legislative and other deliberative bodies it leads to loss of temper and frequently to the passing of the lie. Individuals who are ordinarily even-tempered suddenly become morose or violent. The occupants of public conveyances are snappy in conversation and cross. There are also more suicides in warm weather than in cold. Deeds of violence and strikes predominate in the heated term.

Most of these deplorable conditions are brought about by the ragged state of the nerves, and by loss of sleep. The disgruntled are run down in health. Many also are overtaxing their strength and consequently become nervous wrecks. Overindulgence in smoking and drinking when the thermometer registers over 90 degrees causes faint action of the heart and dizzy spells follow.

The wise man or woman, knowing how the hot weather can disturb their health and nerves, study how to keep from a break-down. They control their eating, drinking and exercise, and keep within such limitations that they can pass through trying days of heat and discomfort with the least possible expenditure of vitality. They determine not to wory and to observe the laws governing health. Those who ignore these laws must pay a severe penalty.

Thoughtless Query.

"Have you ever been married before?" asked the license clerk.

"Great heavens, young man!" exclaimed the experienced prima donna. "Don't you read the papers?"

"Having nothing else to do," remarked the old codger, "I attended a function while I was over at Torpidville the other day. The affair was held in a dispirited grove at the end of a road in which every time a horse popped down his foot the dust shot up in the air like a skyrocket. A band was playing without the slightest remorse. A statesman, with a neck as wrinkled as a pickle, droned forth redundant nonenities without end. A sad and rickety merry-go-wabble wound 'round and 'round to the sound of its own plaintive peedle-deedle. In a tipsy pavilion a hoarse person was endeavoring to sell, in brazen defiance of the pure food and drug act, what looked alarmingly like horned toads fried in axle-grease. A gentleman in a striped tent near by hoarsely stated that he preferred to eat snakes at ten cents per serpent. There was the usual balloon which seemed perfectly willing to do anything but go up. Scattered around through the festal scene were a few old soldiers, grumbling; a smattering of farmers, also grumbling; sundry honest voters, likewise grumbling; and various other folks, nothing about whom is worth mentioning except that they, too, were grumbling. It may have been a reunion, a fair, a rally, a picnic, or what-not; but whatever they chanced to call it, 'twas an excellent example of one of our most cherished institutions."—Kansas City Star.

CHILD'S FACE ALL RED SPOTS

632 N. 5th St., Terre Haute, Ind.—"My little nephew, a boy of four years, had a breaking out on his face. It was little red spots at first, then he would rub and scratch and water blisters would form, and wherever the water would run another would come until his face was covered with them. He would cry and fret. His mother got some medicine, but it did not do any good. He would scream and cry and say it hurt. We hardly knew him, his litle face was all red spots and blisters. So I begged him to let me put some Cuticura Ointment on them. The next morning I made a strong soap suds with Cuticura Soap and washed his face in the warm suds. The little blisters burst by pressing the cloth on them. After I had his face washed, I put the Cuticura Ointment on and in a short time his little face was all red and dry. I kept using the Cuticura Soap and putting on the Cuticura Ointment and his face got as well and it did not leave a scar. He was entirely cured in about one week and a half." (Signed) Mrs. Arthur Haworth, Jan. 10, 1912.

Took Slot Machine at Its Word.

A Kansas City woman recently took her two small daughters to make their first visit to her husband's people, living in a small Kansas town. Naturally she was anxious to make as favorable an impression as possible. So the two little people, on going on an errand to the depot, were cautioned to be on their very best behavior. To the mother's surprise; they returned vigorously chewing gum. As they had no money, she asked them where they got it.

"Oh," explained the older one, "it said on the slot machine, 'Ask the agent for pennies,' so we did."

How He Left.

"Master and mistress 'ad something of a row last night, I 'ear," said the butler ponderously.

"You should have heard 'em," answered the parlor maid in a shocked tone. "Scandalous is what I calls it!"

"No," said the maid, positively, "he didn't leave in his machine; I distinctly heard the mistress say he left in a huff."—London Answers.

Instinctive.

"So you took your wife to the baseball game?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Meekton.

"Did she enjoy it?"

"Only part of it. She thought they wasted a great deal of time running around the lot, but she thought the arguments with the umpire were quite interesting."—Washington Star.

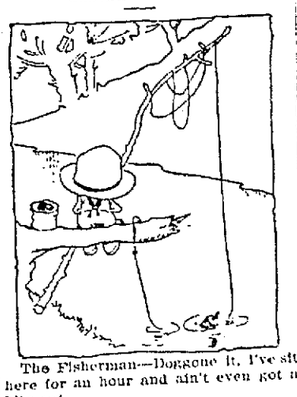

Two Epigrams.

Harping on a subject will more often suggest a harpy than a harpist.—Lippincott's.

In a woman's eye the most attractive thing about a man is her ability to attract him.

SMALL WONDER.

Really Had Best of It.

John Burroughs is well known as one of the foremost of nature writers in this country. Some time ago he visited his brother, Eden Burroughs, who lives in the Catskills, at a place called Hobart. The two brothers went fox hunting together. The honor of the hunt came to Eden, who shot the only fox. It so happened that fox-skins were worth five dollars at that time, and the successful Nimrod took much pride in telling how he got the better of the sage of Slabsides. Later, in boasting to a few friends about it in the presence of his brother, John, he was interrupted by, "You have bragged about that fox hunt long enough. You shot the fox, sold the skin and got five dollars. I wrote a little account of the hunt, and got $75 from the magazine which published it. So there you are!"

Accorded Full Title.

One of the New York representatives in congress tells of a social function in an assembly district political club on the East Side, whereat the chairman of the entertainment committee acted as master of ceremonies.

The chairman was very busy introducing the newly-arrived members of the club to the guests, who included a number of municipal officers. The representative mentioned was presented in a way to halve his official honors with his wife, as "The Honorable and Mrs. Congressman Blank." Next came a couple who were not known to the master of ceremonies, but, after receiving the correct name in a whisper, he announced:

Matter of Justice.

Where shall justice begin, with those who have power or with those who suffer wrong? If exact and ideal justice were done, the weak would make an effort to give to the strong all that is their due, and the strong would try to put their affairs in order so that no just cause of complaint should exist anywhere. The unhappy element in the relations of the strong and the weak is that both are thinking too much about exacting justice and not enough about doing that which is just and right. "Pay what thou owest" is the cry most often heard. "Give me that which is my due, then I will pay you what I owe."—The Christian Register.

Moving Pictures Popular.

In a recent number of the Daily Consular Reports are collected memoranda from cities and towns in various distant parts of the word showing the universal quality of the popular interest which the moving pictures excite. England, Japan, Turkey, Mexico, India, Australia and the islands of the sea all have the same story to tell; wherever the cinematograph goes it finds an instant and sustained welcome.

The Paxton Toilet Co. of Boston, Mass., will send a large trial box of Paxtine Antiseptic, a delightful cleansing and germicidal toilet preparation, to any woman, free, upon request.

Swat the Fly.

The filthy fly has carried many a disease germ and has caused directly many a sickness and many a death It is a proven fact that where united effort has been made the housefly has been practically exterminated It is said that this has been done in England and that no screens are necessary for keeping out flies

1. Throw waste water where it will dry up immediately

2 Keep a tight cover on the garbage can

3 Cover the dog's and the cat's dish as soon as they have finished eating, leaving them a clean dish of water between meals

4. If garbage is not drawn away bury it or burn it. If it must be left in a pile, sprinkle with lime dry dust, and kerosene

5. Keep old tin cans in a tightly covered box, because the bits of food they contain and the water that collects in them is very attractive to flies.

8. Don't let them in

9. Don't let them stay in, even if they manage to get in

Making A Monkey Of Himself

That's what many a man does, when he buys lumber with the idea that all lumber is alike.

We want to impress upon your mind that there's as much difference between two boards, even though classed the same, as there is between a plug and a thoroughbred, and that while our prices are as low as you can get anywhere, yet it is the quality of our lumber that we brag about more than low prices.

If you want the best your money will buy, let us make you an estimate on your next bill of lumber.
